Editorial

By Maggie Thompson

» I'm writing this editorial the day after I wrote last week's editorial. On time all the time — and this way, I can still communicate with you, even while I'm having a high old time with old radio fans. (How many fans of old radio are old radio fans? Hm. Some are comics buffs, though. But I'll get to attend one of those rarities: an entertainment convention at which I am a pretty complete neophyte.)

» In the meantime, Associate Editor John Jackson Miller has been checking the Internet and found ongoing conversations about problems with CBG delivery. Don't forget to keep me posted, folks; this is the second week in a row my issue has taken nine days to get here. Hey, is anyone getting issues more quickly than they had been getting them before Sept. 1?

» By the way, that same John Jackson Miller is doing a keen job putting together the CBG Annual. I know I talked about it last week, but I continue to be awash in nostalgia over the days in which Don and I used to use our fancy (gasp!) Selectric typewriter with (oooooh!) changeable typefaces. (All you had to do was pull a little lever which released the type ball, store that ball away, take out the other typeface ball, insert it, and away you could go. Hot dog!)

» This has nothing to do with comics, but: Tests of adulthood are traditional in many cultures, whether it's weathering battles, experiencing visions while surviving in the wilderness, or being put through a weird rite of passage. How can any of these compare with trying to avoid biting down while sucking on a Mentos ("the chewy mint")? I sure can't do it — and the consarned things are addictive.

Back to comics.

» I wandered through a Hallmark store in a mall recently and spotted the DC comics statuettes on display. What I couldn't find in the area (which was in the midst of lots of Hallmark Christmas-tree ornaments) was a sign that explained what they were or how much they cost. I wonder how they were allocated: one of each statue per store and, when they sell out, they're gone?

If you haven't thought about checking for these, you might take a look. I found some much more to my tastes than others, so you'll want to see them before dropping hints to friends and relatives about which ones you'll want. (And don't forget to scope out the statues in your area comics shops; some beautiful designs are available these days.)

» What turns a fictional character into an icon? Why is it that, say, everybody knows even who Clark Kent's boss is — but only aficionados could tell you today that Spy Smasher was Alan Armstrong or that Captain Midnight's wards were Chuck Ramsey and Joyce Ryan. Although Sir Arthur Conan Doyle died in 1930, the public knows about Sherlock Holmes and Watson — and even Mrs. Hudson — but you have to be a mystery buff or a fan of arcane TV to have heard of The Saint or Raffles or even, these days, Nero Wolfe. Caspar Milquetoast was H.T. Webster's "The Timid Soul" and a self-explanatory description of that personality for a generation. But Webster died in 1953, and the two terms have been forgotten. What keeps a character alive?

A hesitant thought suggests: marketing. New (good) performances, new (good) products, new (good) stories, new (good) licensing can keep a character alive. And if a series comes to an end, sooner or later the character will pass from the public mind.

Rob Liefeld announces Extreme's 1997 plans

'We've gotten way too close to the edge, and it's time to pull back'

Extreme Studios has announced its publishing plans for 1997. The former Image studio has consolidated its titles under the Maximum Press name.

Extreme Studios President Rob Liefeld said, "First off, we're doing a little housecleaning and embracing a new philosophy in regards to the titles we publish.

For the past two years, I have watched our titles and the subject matter they contain grow darker and darker and I feel that we've gotten way too close to the edge, and it's time to pull back.

"I am disturbed by the fact that I see more and more of our titles featuring mature or adult situations containing graphic violence and language. As a kid, I favored series such as Legion of Super-Heroes, The Teen Titans, The X-Men, and The Avengers. These comics were bold and bright, featuring heroes that I felt comfortable cheering for. When I look at our current slate of titles, I don't see the same attributes that attracted me as a fan."

"I hold myself responsible for creating and publishing comics that glorified the dark side, such as Priest and other titles of similar subject matter. With books like Priest, Prophet, Avengelyne, and others, I believe I was working through some of my own Christian beliefs. I guess growing up in a family of preachers had more of an effect on me than I thought.

"I feel that we have explored and glorified the dark side of humanity and nature long enough and my desire now is to return to a lighter, more accessible comic-book experience. While we realize that there is a segment of fandom that craves the dark side, we feel that shifting our focus towards a lighter, less-menacing tone is the right move for our company.

"Ironically enough, a comic book entitled The Dark Side has been produced by Maximum Press and is headed towards stores. It serves as an introduction to characters such as Avengelyne, Priest, and Knightmare, but we toned it down quite a bit and it's only a one-shot.

"I've grown uncomfortable with certain titles that we have produced and feel the need to pull back and away from comics that explore and promote evil. Gone from our schedule are titles such as Priest, Darkchylde, and Celestine.

Avengelyne will be toned down and less racy, making it more accessible to the younger reader. Avengelyne, which has always been a huge success for us, has always represented goodness and the light, and her adventures will continue along that course.

"In light of this new philosophy, titles like Youngblood, Glory, Prophet, and NewMen will be brought to the forefront with 'Extreme Genesis.' Originally planned for a January release, 'Extreme Genesis' has been rescheduled to February.

"Extreme Genesis" begins with Extreme Genesis #0, which will introduce the reader to the new world of Extreme and how it exists outside of Image Comics.

"As I continue to work on titles such as Captain America and The Avengers," Liefeld added, "I am reminded of the magic that comics can offer the reader. My goal and that of my company is to return to the basics that our predecessors built this industry on."

'The Maxx' #26 causes a stir in Mississippi Mr. Gone's origin gone from Jackson shelves

A parental complaint following the purchase of The Maxx #26 by an 11-year-old boy in Jackson, Miss., has led area bookstores and a grocery-store chain to pull comics from their newsstands, according to a report in the Jackson Clarion-Ledger.

In a press conference Oct. 17, Rankin-Madison (Miss.) District Attorney John Kitchens said that the boy's mother contacted his office after going through the Image title, purchased at a Sack & Save grocery store. The woman was upset over allusions to suicide and sexually explicit acts between children and adults in the issue.

"What we're trying to do is notify the public and warn the parents to go through the comic-book stacks," Kitchens said. "This is gross. This is a great violation of several laws."

No charges have been filed against Image or the grocery store chain, owned by Jitney Jungle of America Inc., where spokesperson Kara Kimbrough said that company plans to pull all of its comic books and review titles thoroughly.

At the press conference, Kitchens said that he had contacted Capital News, the distributor of the comic book, and that the distributor would stop placing it in metro-Jackson area stores. He said he has also contacted Hinds County, Miss., authorities about the situation.

"I do not want a child buying a comic book that has sexually explicit material in it," he said.

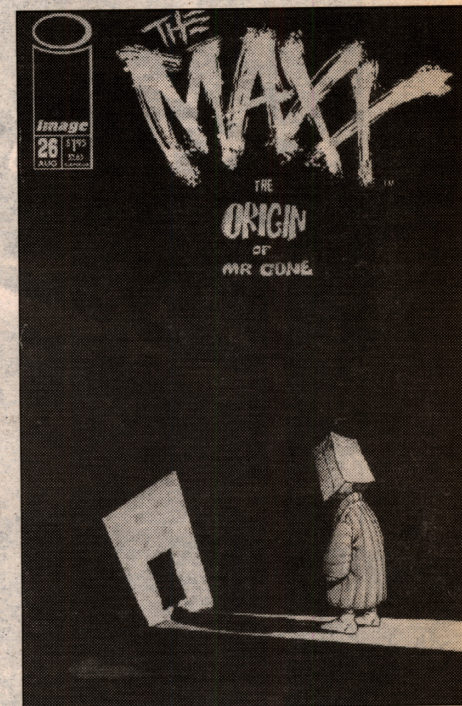

Image Communications Director Kelly Van Landingham said that the issue of The Maxx in question was about a man seeking counseling after years of abuse.

"It's not designed to entertain small children," she said, adding that Image believes consumers should take responsibility for what they purchase.

"We are producing a form of entertainment which is not pornography, which is not violent, and the content matter is obviously very popular because it's being purchased by a lot of people," she said.

Steve Brantley, the manager on duty at the Jackson Books-A-Million, said he pulled the seven copies of The Maxx #26 from his shelves and that the store plans to scrutinize its comics selections in the future.

Andrews Group purchases Toy Biz stock

On Oct. 17, Andrews Group Inc. announced that it will purchase approximately 67% of Toy Biz Inc.'s Class A Common Stock at a price per share consisting of cash and Andrews Group debt estimated to have a value below current market. The shares are being sold by Isaac Perlmutter and Avi Arad.

Andrews Group is also working on a proposal to purchase new equity capital at Marvel Entertainment Group Inc., which currently holds nearly all of Toy Biz's Class B Common Stock. According to a release, the proposal is subject to a number of conditions, including: "a waiver of Marvel's banks of certain financial covenants contained in its bank credit facilities, the restructuring of those facilities to provide for Marvel's cash requirements, and an agreement among Marvel, its banks, the holders of certain Marvel holding company bonds, and Andrews Group on the terms of the Andrews Group purchase."

Representatives of Andrews Group noted that, if the agreement goes through, "it is expected that any such purchase would result in substantial dilution to the existing Marvel shares, including the Marvel shares which serve as collateral for Marvel holding company bonds."

In addition, Andrews Group said that it anticipates that Marvel will make a proposal in the immediate future to the Toy Biz board of directors to acquire all remaining shares of Toy Biz at a cash price approximating current market value, making Toy Biz a wholly owned subsidiary of Marvel. In anticipation of the proposal, the Toy Biz board of directors formed a special committee of directors not affiliated with Andrews Group or Marvel to negotiate with Marvel on behalf of the Toy Biz minority shareholders.

At the close of trading Friday, Oct. 18, Marvel stock was valued at $4.37½ per share, while Toy Biz stock was valued at $18.12½ per share.

Top Cow postpones 'Arcanum'

Top Cow has canceled all orders for Brandon Peterson's Arcanum #1, saying it plans to resolicit the title in 1997.

Top Cow cited lost orders due to confusion resulting from Capital City Distribution's acquisition by Diamond Comic Distributors as its principle reason for delaying the title.

Peterson said, "Personally, I couldn't be happier. This extra time gives me a chance to slow down and really make the story and art the best they can possibly be. Arcanum is my dream project, and I couldn't be more pleased that Top Cow is taking the time to do this project right."

Schreff chooses vice president

Marvel Entertainment has named Sandra Wildman Padnos to the newly created position of Executive Vice President, Communications.

Padnos, formerly president of Padnos Ink, an entertainment public relations firm she founded in 1988, will oversee media relations, industry relations, and community affairs for all divisions of Marvel Entertainment Group.

Based in Los Angeles, she will report directly to recently appointed President and Chief Operating Officer David Schreff.

Schreff said, "Marvel's expansion requires that we communicate a cohesive branding message to our various industries, partners, and fans. Sandi's unique overview, proven expertise, and strong leadership skills made her the ideal choice to develop and implement this far-reaching communications strategy."

Schreff knew Padnos from the mid 1980s, when both worked at Showtime, The Movie Channel, and The Disney Channel. Padnos is a co-founder of CTPAA, the cable industry public affairs association. Early in her career, she was a publicist for director Robert Altman's Lion's Gate Films.

Padnos said, "I look forward to working with David and the team to link the generations that enjoy the cultural icons that Marvel has created."

Hamilton unveils Barks 'Good Girl Art'

Carl Barks moves from Bruce Hamilton's Gladstone Comics to the company's Hamilton Comics imprint for publication of The Unexpurgated Carl Barks, a trade-paperback collection of Barks cartoons done early in his career for The Calgary Eye-Opener.

The Eye-Opener was an early men's magazine and Barks' work there as a staff artist and editor featured risqué gags that were a far cry from his later duck comics. Hamilton warned that retailers may want to take care in displaying The Unexpurgated Carl Barks so that it is distinguished from his all-ages titles.

Hamilton has collected 120 of Barks' cartoons from the magazine. Although the original cartoons were printed in black and white, they are reproduced in color in this book.

Several Eye-Opener covers are included in color, and a Barks Eye-Opener flip story can be animated by flipping the corners of even-numbered pages.

The 68-page color trade paperback is priced at $9.95 and is scheduled to ship Jan. 20. The order deadline is Dec. 17.

Comics NEWS

Alex Robinson's mini-comic comes to Antarctic Press with the October publication of Box Office Poison #1. Robinson's story follows the romantic complications of a disgruntled bookstore clerk and the industry tribulations of an aspiring artist of super-hero comics. The title contains some nudity and profanity and is not intended for children. Priced at $3.50, the 40-page black-and-white title is scheduled for bimonthly release.

Best

Best Comics' flagship title Battleground Earth is scheduled to make its debut in October. Created by writer Paul Mellette and penciller Chuck Angel, the epic series is intended to span several centuries. In the distant past, forces of good and evil race to find a boy who is destined to defend Earth against demonic invaders. The plot calls for future issues to bring the characters to the present.

Although this is their first joint project, Mellette, Angel, and inker Glenn Anderson previously worked for Pocket Change Comics. Mellette said the new series will not use sex as a selling point, and its women will "look like women and wear clothes." The 32-page, black-and-white title is priced at $2.50.

Comico crosses The Elementals with Arthurian fantasy in Rebels of Avalon #1. Merlin's carefully maintained peace between humans and the Goblin Kingdoms threatens to unravel, and Avalon's only hope rests with the wizard's wife, a visitor from another world, where she is known as Morningstar of The Elementals. Priced at $2.95, the 32-page, October-shipping color title is written by Ed Dunphy and drawn by James Neel and W. C. Corani.

Frank Miller will provide a cover for Dark Horse Presents #115, which features the return of John Arcudi's The Creep. Arcudi's outsider detective will be drawn by Brian O'Connell. The flip-book format also features a cover by Roger Langridge depicting Dr. Spin. Besides Dr. Spin and The Creep, the November-shipping issue includes installments of Trypto the Acid Dog and Ed Brubaker's Lowlife.

DC's heroes gather for the holidays in the DC Universe Holiday Bash one-shot. In a story written by Barry Jameson and drawn by Graham Nolan, Superman tries to give the gift of a day without crime to the citizens of Metropolis. Green Lantern protects a Chanukah celebration against hate-mongers in a story by writer Michael Jan Friedman and artists Roger Robinson and Phyllis Novin. And last-minute shoppers will be able to relate to Brian Augustyn and Mark Waid's Flash story, in which the speedster races to every open store in several time zones to find the right gift for Linda minutes before a Christmas party.

Vampirella and Pantha will cross paths for a one-shot scheduled for early 1997. The title will be written by Mark

Miller and painted by Mark Texeira.

Vampi and Pantha fans will get their first glimpse of Vampi vs. Pantha in January, when Harris presents Vampirella & Pantha Showcase #1, a flip book preview of the Vampi-Pantha crossover and a second upcoming painted title.

The second previewed title, also scheduled for early 1997, is Vampirella: Crimson Lust, a two-issue mini-series written by James Robinson and painted by Joe Jusko.

The preview title will feature flip covers by Jusko and Texeira, some preview pages, and a look behind the scenes of the upcoming painted titles.

The Pittsburgh Comicon In November??????????

Many of you are asking yourselves just that question. For the last 3 years you've been looking forward to the ultimate spring break: The Pittsburgh Comicon. Well don't panic. The Comicon will be back this April.

However, the response to our annual show has been so overwhelming, we decided to treat you fans with two Cons in 96. Thus was born the Comicon Fall Spectacular.

What can you expect from the Fall Spectacular? Well you'll get that same Comicon Flair with a Sci-Fi Feel. At the Fall Spectacular, we have a great mix of comic and sci-fi talent to thrill everyone.

Our line up for the Fall Spectacular includes some of the biggest names in the industry. John de Lancie, Star Trek's classic villain "Q" will be beaming in to sign autographs for all you Trekers.

Not to be outdone, Star Wars' number one bad guy, Darth Vader - David Prowse, will also be signing autographs at the Comicon.

And if good guys are more your type, you can meet Mark Goodard, Major Don West from Lost in Space.

But great actors aren't the only attraction at the Fall Spectacular. We're also playing host to the World Renown Painter William Stout, famous for his paintings of dinosaurs and other exotic scenes and we'll have first class Fantasy artist Edward Beard Jr.

Plus the Comicon will be welcoming many great comic pros, including: Scott McDaniel, hot off his new Nightwing series; David Mack from Kabuki; P. Craig Russell artist from the critically acclaimed Sandman; Val Semeiks (see left) from Wolverine; and Harvey Mercadoosio artist of Europa and the Pirate Twins just to name a few.

Plus we'll be having a big charity auction and magic tournament. So make your plans now to attend the Pittsburgh Comicon Fall Spectacular: November 23 and 24, 1996.

SHOW HOURS: Saturday 10 - 7, Sunday 10 - 5
Cost: $8.00 per Day

In a recent CBG, mention was made of a Curt Swan story recently published in Swamp Thing #165 (Apr 96). While I do not disagree with the tone of the story, or the artists (having met Kim Demulder during his stint on the Transformers mini-series with Marvel, he is a neat guy who did for moi a sketch of Megatron), I would like to recall the mid-period, so to speak, of the comic-book career of Swan.

While many artists elect to go on to commercial work — I do not blame them, it is more profitable to make a living for their families and get on with their careers — I sure miss the various styles portrayed in the vast Silver Age of comics. A Kirby in super-heroes, Jack Abel in war comics, Gene Colan in romance, Ogden Whitney in humorous situations (Herbie), Carl Barks with the ducks.

Along with many artists drawing the Superman Family — Mooney, Schaffenberger, Sekowsky, and Dillin in JLA, Sprang and Mooney again in World's Finest, later Novick and Andru — the three main artists, Boring, Plastino, and Swan, left their personalities in four colors. Others, like Sikela, Papp, John Forte, are forgotten, but reprints bring a better appreciation of their work. So I ask you to print some of these copies of a Jimmy Olsen story from JO #47 (Sep 60), "Jimmy Olsen Grows Up," by Swan, inks by Forte, author Binder? A little hokey in these bearish economic times, but more satisfying than bulging biceps and a lack of continuity in the stories of today.

Letters intended for publication should be addressed to Oh, So?, Comics Buyer's Guide, 700 E. State St., Iola, WI 54990. It is not possible to publish all letters received, and I cannot reply to letters which we do not print.

Letters will be edited and may be cut due to length and other considerations. Responses to Oh, So? will be in first person, and — unless otherwise identified — will be by Maggie Thompson. Other respondents are signified by their initials:

Manuscripts and press releases should be typewritten and double-spaced and contain absolutely no words in all capital letters. Please indent for paragraphs. [Unfortunately, the photocopies would not reproduce well in our pages. However, we encourage collectors to check out Swan's work from the '60s whenever possible.]

President, Comic Fans Union

I am writing you about the formation of the Comic Fans Union (CFU). This is a group being formed by comic-book fans to try to correct some of the problems in comics today, which are taking the fun out of comics for fans. Companies in this industry have ignored what fans really want for too long now, and it is time for that to change.

I am contacting all the major companies to talk about some of the problems in comic books being published today. Here are the main concerns of this group about our industry:

1. Decades of stories of established characters can be thrown out to start a concept over again.
2. Special covers greatly drive up the prices of comics.
3. Characters are killed or maimed with the only purpose being to drive up sales for a few months.
4. Too few panels and story fill a title — with too much space devoted to characters posing.
5. Comics are too expensive for new fans to enter the field.

The CFU also wants to do more than talk about the problems. It wants to poll fans on what they want for the future. It wants to interview retired people from the industry who have never been properly interviewed, to get information about comics' past so it will never be lost. Also, the CFU wants to be able to provide some help for these people, if they become ill.

Besides these matters, we have a business side. We represent some artists, and any comics fan who might want pictures drawn (super-hero or non-super-hero) but doesn't know where to hire an artist who understands comic-book characters can contact us, and we can set something up. Any artists who want to be part of this program can send copies of their work to us.

We also have an accounting program available to new and existing publishers and retailers. Low-priced bookkeeping and accounting services are available to any company that wants it (plus some free work). We want to develop a low-cost accounting practice that specializes in comics, which should be a first. This practice would be more help to a company than bookkeepers or accountants who don't understand our industry. Any company that wants to be apart of this program can contact us.

Any fan who wants to join us can do so for free. You can contact us at the address above.

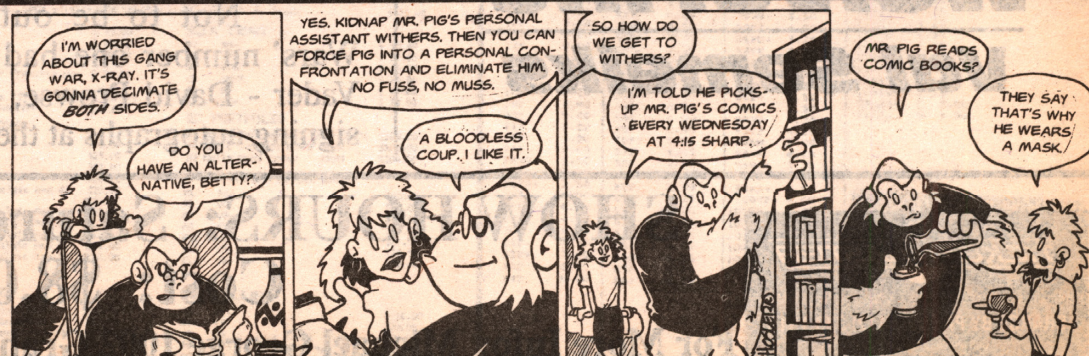

These are the topics being worked on now by this union. I have already been talking to DC Comics Publisher Paul Levitz and Dark Horse Vice President of Publishing David Scroggy about these issues. I hope a time will come when fans, companies, and creators will be able to work together to make this a stronger industry. Only then will the fans truly start to buy the number of comics they used to.

David M. Harszlak

175 Helen St.

Cheektowaga, NY 14206

In response to Greg Gildersleeve, whose letter appeared in CBG #1189, you are not the only one who misses the original Legion of Super-Heroes. I stopped buying and collecting the Legion shortly after Giffen's first issue of the "new" series. Unlike you, who at least has looked at a Legion comic book over the past few years, I have stayed away completely.

I will continue to do so — unless, of course, DC undoes the Crisis and brings back its original universe and the original Legion. Since that's not likely to happen in my lifetime, I vote my displeasure with the current Legion by staying away completely. It may well be a futile gesture on my part, but it does give me some degree of satisfaction knowing that I at least am not supporting something I don't like. Still, there are times I wish I could go to my local comics store and pick up a copy of a new adventure featuring Superboy, Supergirl, Mon-El, Brainiac 5, and all of the old gang. By the way, I think your song was just great!

Sigh. I really do miss the real Legion of Super-Heroes.

Which brings me to the second part of this letter, the state of today's comics market. Sales have declined drastically, fans have become alienated, gimmick collectible comics no longer sell as they used to, multi-part mega-crossovers leave readers and fans cold, and sales of the "new breed" of violent villainous "killer" heroes such as The Punisher have sunk like the Titanic.

In addition, comics stores are under assault by right-wing radical groups who object to the type of material that they are selling as entertainment. Those that aren't under attack by right-wing radicals are facing tight financial constraints, resulting in the closure of many long-established stores. Stores which haven't closed have scaled back their product lines, leaving many fans and readers out in the cold when it comes to collecting certain titles or companies. Just try to buy a copy of Hilly Rose or Star Seed at a comics store in Buffalo, N.Y. Only one store carries Hilly Rose, and only one store carries Star Seed, and they are not the same store.

Has it ever occurred to the people running Marvel and DC that they have finally killed the goose that laid the golden egg? Haven't they yet realized that in order for them to survive they need to appeal to comics fans of all ages? Don't they understand that, with each "makeover" of their characters, they lose more and more of their longtime readers and fans? Apparently not.

As evidence of this, I refer to Robert C. Lane's letter, which also appeared in CBG #1189. Here is someone else who has virtually the same opinion as I do. He misses the wisecracking Spider-Man, the Hal Jordan Green Lantern, the Barry Allen Flash, the Superman-Batman team-ups, and the Oliver Queen Green Arrow. But what will his public expression of this opinion get him? Absolutely nothing! Why? Because publishers are too busy trying to pursue the younger generation only.

Instead of trying to produce comics for both the younger generation and the older generation, they continue to produce comics that have only a limited appeal to older readers, or comics that only appeal to the younger generation. Why can't both be done? Why does one group have to profit at the expense of the other? What is so special about only publishing comics for the under-25 crowd? Granted, new readers have to be brought into the fold in order for the business to continue, but that doesn't mean you throw out your old ones! Yet that is exactly what the powers that be in the comics industry have done. And that's why their sales have suffered.

Sure, you can draft a long list of dumb moves that the industry has made in the past three years. Among those dumb moves: raising cover prices when the market could ill afford the hike, using expensive high-quality paper on comics which don't deserve it, attempting to corner the market by controlling the distribution channels, and (one of my favorites) trying to turn the comics business into a "Franklin Mint"-style collectible business. All of these moves have hurt the comics industry over the course of the past three to four years.

Still, the biggest mistake that the comics industry ever made was to alienate its long-time older fans and readers. Each week, the letters pages of CBG are full of readers who continue to complain about the state of today's comics. Each week, readers write about how much fun collecting comics used to be. Each week, people like me write in to express our opinions about what is wrong with the comics business. It just doesn't seem to do any good.

Marvel cannot begin to know just how betrayed many long-term Cap fans feel now that it dumped Waid and Garney from the book. The bitterness at this "executive decision" doesn't just extend to the readers; many retailers are so incensed over what Marvel's done that they are deliberately not promoting this project. In fact, one dealer confided in me that he will under-order the new Cap title, just so there won't be enough copies on the stand for fans to buy. A short-sighted attitude on the part of this retailer? Sure is, but why should he be any different than the publishers?

Finally, in order for the comics business to rebound from its current slump, it's going to have to change its current attitude. In order to survive, the powers that be in the comics industry are going to have to win back older fans and readers, while at the same time they continue to publish comics for the younger ones, as well. Until this is done, the comics industry will only be selling to a small fraction of its potential audience.

Martin L. Greim

Natick, MA 01760

An open letter to Marvel Comics:

I'd like to thank you big time for the changes you've made in the Fantastic Four and Captain America comics. I've read Fantastic Four since the original Marvel issue #1 and Captain America thru the 1940s, '50s, and his rebirth in Avengers #4 until now. I enjoyed each title with the art by Kirby, Sinnott, Buscema, Byrne, and Ryan on The FF and Kirby, Simon, Shores, Byrne, a host of others, and, most recently, Garney and Koblish on art and Mark Waid on the writing on Captain America. I'll miss the recent artists on those series. Paul Ryan's work on Fantastic Four was exemplary, though the storyline suffered under DeFalco. It seems he forgot the basic concept of the book — It's The Fantastic Four, not the Fantastic Cast of Hundreds. Even with the plot, Paul Ryan's art was a joy to behold. The same holds true with the Captain America comic book, except, there, the story was worth reading as well as the look of the art.

However, let me not dwell in the past. The New Era has been ushered in. New costumes on The Fantastic Four. Fantastic art filled with all the tiny lines that comics fans have come to love. Then we have the new Captain Wonder — I say Wonder because the A is gone from Cap's mask and has been replaced with the spiffy new Wonder Woman logo. Cap also has a new power — he can move his hands without wrists! He also has the same facial expression that everyone else in the comic book has. Captain Wonder certainly is a wonder!

Really, I can't thank you enough for the new looks! I truly love these brand, spanning new titles. Now every month, when I go into my local comics shop, I'll look for those titles and smile. I'll smile because I know I won't be buying them. Instead I'll purchase DC Comics' Flash and Superman, Man of Tomorrow because they'll be drawn by Paul Ryan. You remember Paul Ryan? He's the guy who kept The Fantastic Four going. Darn, I wish you hadn't let him get away to DC. That's two more comics I have to buy from them, whereas the only comics I'll be buying from Marvel are — er — gee, there aren't any. Son of a gun. For the first time since the 1960s, there isn't a Marvel title on my buying list. Well, thanks anyway for 414 great issues of Fantastic Four and 454 fun issues of Captain America. If Captain Wonder ever runs into Captain America, I may pick up that issue.

I imagine that every kid who reads comic books latches on to one character as a favorite, for whatever reason. For me it was Green Lantern. I used to dream of having a power ring, of exploring the universe and righting wrongs, or even just making a big green hand to pick things up with. How many times I practiced the oath! The closest I ever got to that dream was the day I went to school on Halloween wearing the GL costume my mother had finished sewing the night before. (Thanks, Mom.)

[Spoiler Warning: The rest of this letter discusses events in recent DC issues.]

These thoughts came back to me upon learning of DC's decision to kill my main man, Hal Jordan. Anyone who knows me knows how vocal a critic I've been of the shabby treatment this character has received. More than once have the words, "Why can't they just kill him and get it over with?" come from my lips.

Well, my "wish" is about to be granted, but, instead of feeling relieved, I only feel sad — sad because Hal won't make it to his 40th anniversary year, 1999; sad because, while Barry Allen got to go out as the hero he always was, Hal has been turned into something light years from the character I loved; sad because a whole generation will know him only as this Parallax abomination.

I guess the question that sounds most loudly in my mind is why? Why destroy a character with so many years of service? If DC wanted to bring in a younger GL, why not have Hal simply pass on the ring and go live as a hermit? That way, 10 years from now, the new Alan Moore or Frank Miller (Hell, even the new John Byrne) might have come along and rediscovered the man. And maybe this new creator would have grown up marveling at Gil Kane's wonderful rendition of the GL Corps. And maybe we would all have enjoyed some great, new tales. Now we'll never know, because DC saw fit to tear down one of its icons. Why?

I can already hear the sighs of, "Oh, get over it," as readers skip on to the next letter. But why shouldn't I be able to pick up the continuing adventures of my childhood hero? Maybe I don't like Lobo. Or Spawn. Or Wolverine. Isn't the marketplace big enough to cater to all tastes? Robin, so recently voted to death by the readers, has his own series! All while good ol' Hal gets the shaft.

Perhaps I am overreacting. We are talking about comic books, after all. I can always just re-read the classic tales from the '60s and '70s and try not to think about what could have been. To anyone who's rolling their eyes at this letter, I say I hope this will never happen to your character, the one who made you want to run to the newsstand (or comics shop), the one whom you would've given almost anything to be like. The bell could toll for you at any time. It's already too late for me.

As I've been reading The Final Night over the past several weeks, I've found myself wishing a strange and uncomfortable wish. I wished for the death of someone whose adventures I've followed almost my entire life — the only Silver Age comics hero I have a complete collection of. I've watched bitterly for the past several years as DC, under the guiding hands of Mike Carlin, Dan Jurgens, Kevin Dooley, and Ron Marz, has turned my favorite character into a mass-murdering maniac.

[Spoiler Warning: This paragraph gives away developments in the issues under discussion.] Now I found myself praying that Hal Jordan would die. A noble death, a bitter death, it didn't really matter. What mattered was that these people would no longer be able to misuse and abuse my favorite character. Now Hal Jordan is dead. Karl Kesel wrote an excellent story, managing to end Green Lantern's decades long career without inflicting any more damage on his memory. My favorite hero is dead. He's gone where DC can't hurt him any more. And I feel a little better. Still bitter, but a little better. Thank you, DC, for killing my favorite character.

P.S.: Please don't bring him back — ever!

Justin Valla

I felt a loss for the industry when Jack Kirby, Don Heck, Curt Swan, and others passed away, but I knew very little of their work. Mike Parobeck's death hit closer to home, as I was exposed to much more of his work. But Mark Gruenwald's passing has really hit home.

I never met Gruenwald. I never spoke to him or saw him at any conventions. But I read Mark's Remarks in the Avengers titles way back when. I got to know what he thought about certain things from them, and they gave a very human quality to the hobby I had just started.

He edited Iron Man #215 — the comic book that made me buy comic books regularly. I then snatched up all the titles he edited. And then I started reading other titles from Marvel. Then some from other companies. Well, I read tons these days, and I credit Gruenwald for that.

I read (and absolutely loved) his "Captain America Gets Fired" saga. My next exposure to his work was D.P.7 — a truly great piece of work (even if it was a New Universe title). After that, I spent a year on a quest to complete the run of his Squadron Supreme mini-series and was very satisfied with what I read. So much so that I wrote him a long essay on what I thought about it. A few weeks later, I got a note from him thanking me for taking the time to write. He also said he had the (long out-of-print) Squadron Supreme graphic novel "lying around," so he sent that, as well. The note is framed on my wall, and the graphic novel rests with all the ones I had paid for.

A few years ago, either my tastes changed or his writing did, and I bought less and less of his work. But it always comforted me to know that Gruenwald was right in the middle of what Marvel has become — and I'm sure he did his best to keep the fans in mind while decisions were made affecting us. I started buying Marvel titles more when it was announced that Gruenwald would be directly editing titles again — where I thought he had always done his best work — and I feel a loss now that he will no longer be doing it. But that loss can't come close to the loss the industry now has because he's not with us anymore.

My condolences to his family and friends.

Since some letter writers suggest that their fellow readers should thank others for the work they've done and are doing, I thought this would be an appropriate time.

Keith Giffen: It's great to see you back doing tons of comics again — you were missed.

Kevin Maguire and Adam Hughes: I miss you and am eagerly awaiting your respective upcoming titles.

Garth Ennis: it's amazing how one single page can both amuse me and terrify me.

Peter Bagge: What can I say? I like Hate and hate everything else.

Dark Horse: Get the Instant Piano gang back together — even if it is only as a quarterly.

And Mark Waid and Alex Ross: you're both incredible talents separately, but, together, you make a truly special team — words cannot describe Kingdom Come.

And, of course, the CBG crew: When Peter David is good, he's really, really good. Mark Evanier and Tony Isabella are incredible — I tear pages trying to get to your respective columns when the latest issue hits my mailbox. And Maggie Thompson: Thank you for the industry wake-up call in your 25th anniversary issue. I don't see the changing mood of the people in the industry coming so soon after you reminded us that comics have hit slumps before as a coincidence. Hey, if Frank Miller can now write positive columns, someone must have had an impact. I think it was you.

That's it. Thanks to everyone whose work I've been exposed to these last 10 or so years. Prices may be exploding. It may be harder to get some titles without preordering them. There may be a lot of substandard work out there. But this is not a dead industry. And I will always be here reading.

[Thank you. I suspect that what has actually happened since #1162 is not so much that I wrote an inspirational column but, rather, that a lot of people simultaneously came to the conclusion we came to when we were going through issues of CBG prior to that anniversary issue. As I said at the time:

"We've been through gluts. We've been through censorship. We've lost giants of the field. We've been through times when even the most devoted comics collector found it next to impossible to locate the items he or she looked for. We've seen distributors leave the field. We've seen low circulations that led to massive cutbacks. We've seen would-be profiteers enter the field to grab the money and run."

I think a bunch of people are now looking forward to the next boom, preparing for the time when consumers-to-be start to hunt for them. Whatever's causing it, there are some wonderful comic books out there right now.]

"He's a former Special Forces operative with preternaturally heightened sensory acuity — he's a rocker-nerd anthropologist. They're detectives!"

Sorry, I couldn't resist. This letter is a couple of weeks overdue, since it's a reply to Randall Kirby's letter in CBG #1184, but (since the topic at hand is a favorite of mine, namely, the UPN TV series The Sentinel) I simply had to write.

What your correspondent remarked upon, in discussing the influence of comics upon the recent TV season, was how strongly the hyper senses of the Sentinel's cop hero reminded him of Marvel Comics' Daredevil. What I see when I watch this show — besides sharp writing, an attractive, talented cast, wonderful directing, and a highly inventive premise, — is a big, tough, irascible, traditional-minded guy teamed up, certainly against his nature and almost against his will, with a small, smart, open-minded, progressive guy. In other words, the Sentinel, while being completely original, captures everything that was best in Power Man and Iron Fist — my first series. Which is why I love it.

There are other things to recommend it, besides. It's an action show that really delivers on the big effects — but holds interest through great characterization. The production company puts tremendous thought into every aspect of the show's design. Like, you look at the loft the two heroes share and realize that the cop — with the heightened sense of taste — probably owns more cooking utensils than most restaurants and that his hippie roommate has littered the place with crystals, fossils, hand-woven blankets, and primitive art.

And let me assure women out there that the hunk factor in this cast is high. (I advance the actor playing the anthropologist straight to the bonus round just for his hair.)

Anyway, out of the seven episodes I've seen so far, only one had a lame, derivative story (or am I the only one who knows that "Young Hero, in defiance of all logic and previous characterization, falls for villain's female relative and acts like a fool" has been done before?) Yet even that one had great performances and directing, and, within an overall unsatisfactory dramatic structure, some truly exquisite scenes for every member of the cast.

In fact, if I have a fault to find, it would be that not all of the show's writers seem comfortable with the notion or application of superpowers and that some of them forget why these mismatched heroes are a team. The first episode I saw had that problem and, since I tuned in right after the credits had sort of explained it, I was slightly bewildered. But delighted, nonetheless. But I've been having that fight — the one about incorporating your premise into the story instead of just telling the audience about it beforehand — with other writers and editors my entire career.

Anyway, my complaints are about tiny imperfections. Let's talk about just some of what's been great.

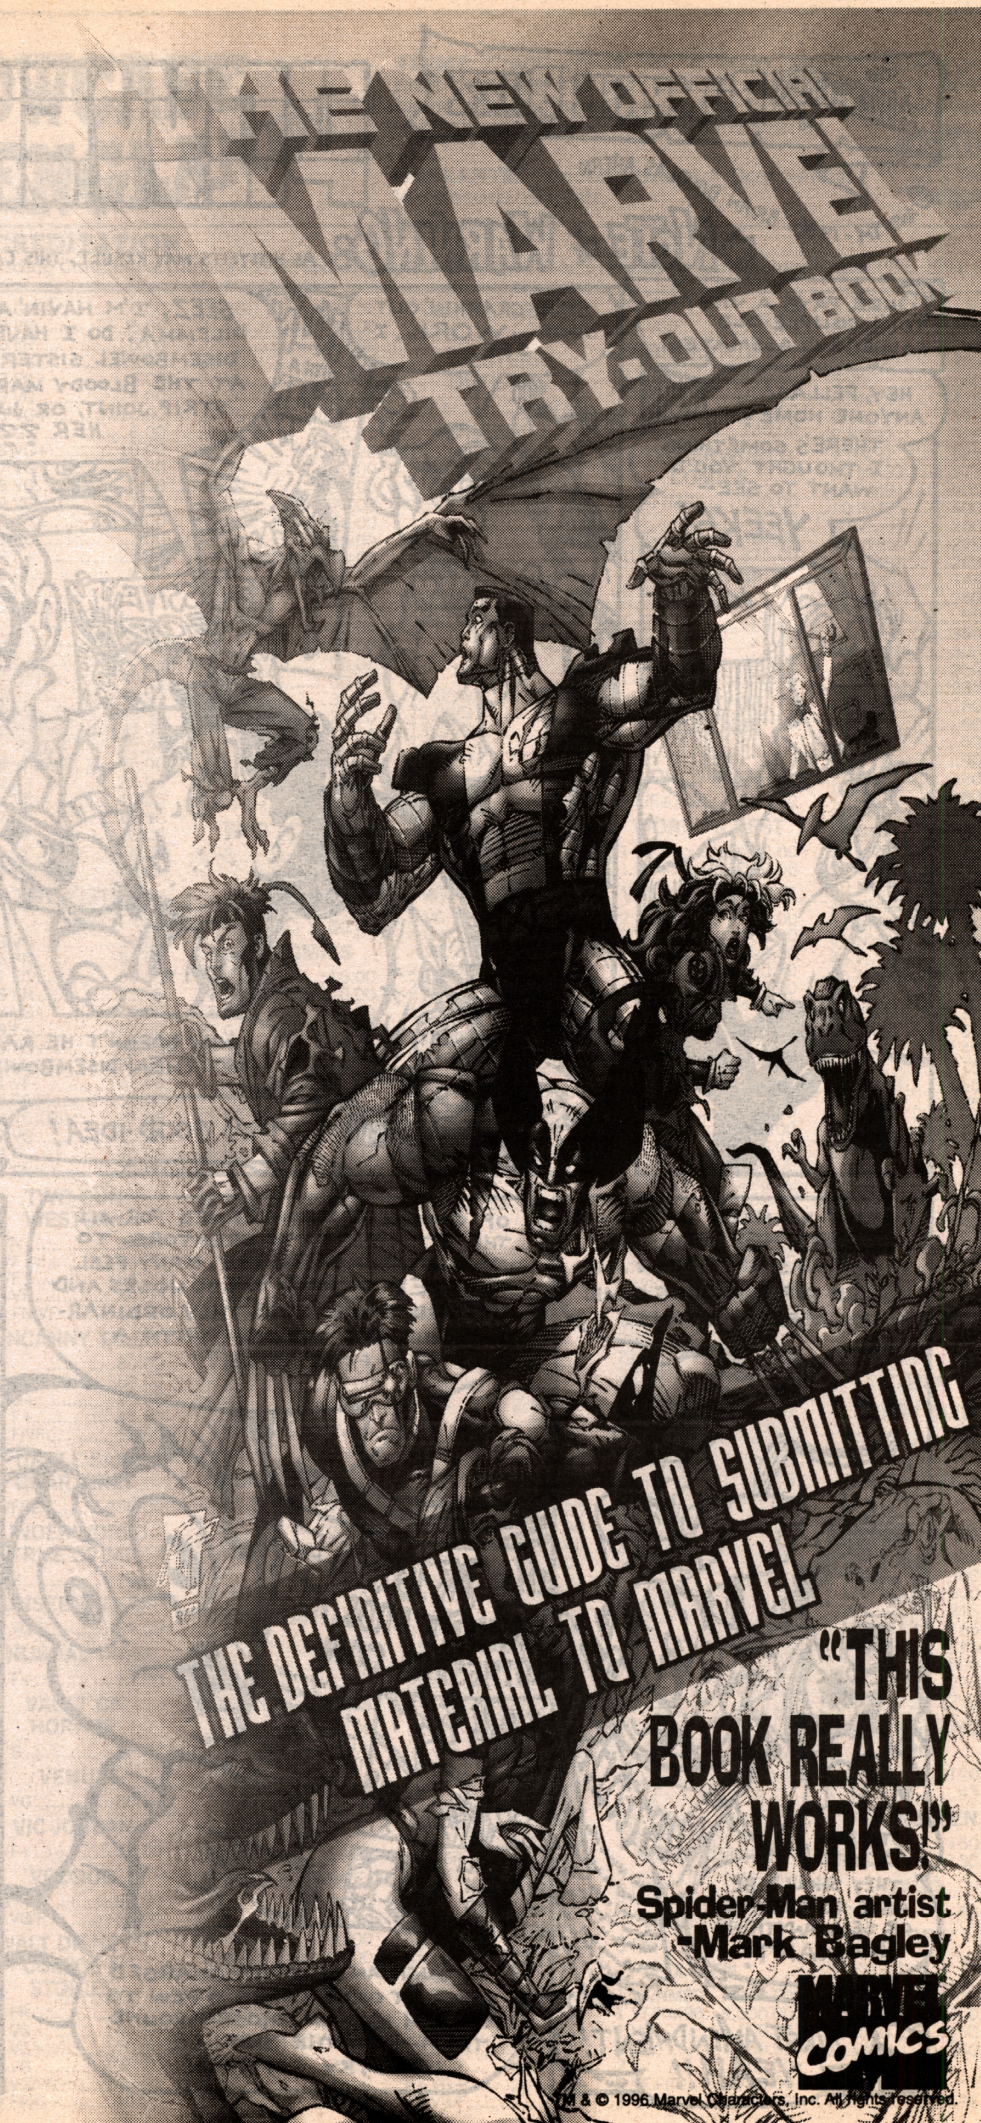

Like a fast-paced and witty episode by Howard Chaykin, written at the very top of his game, that was entirely about the detective's powers and why the heroes are a team. (Thanks, Howard.)

Or a show with the awful but intriguing premise of a serial killer with an Eve Harrington complex, featuring a chillingly demented and charming Dennis Christopher.

Or, my personal favorite for "Boy, have these guys bought their own premise"-type laughs: The cop is on witness-protection duty. And, since he and his scholarly sidekicks are partners — the anthropologist being the big expert on what makes the cop's powers work — he naturally brings his pal along. And, when he needs a moment to himself, off he goes — leaving the helpless witness alone and handcuffed to an unarmed grad student. What do you say in a case like that? "It's OK. I'm an anthropologist."

I'm not sure I'd find that comforting.

Anyway, in my market, this show airs Wednesday at 8 p.m., right before Star Trek: Voyager. If you like what I like, check it out.

(This is part two of four on the subject of Smilin' Stan Lee. Collect the set.)

I "discovered" Marvel somewhere in the first dozen issues of Fantastic Four — no easy find, given the wretchedness of their distribution in Los Angeles. Unlike others, I was not completely blown away at first. They seemed like good enough comics and, yes, something innovative was happening there. But I think that, when we look back today on those early numbers and see the dawns of a new era, that's perception via hindsight.

"Back in the late '60s, a local Marvel-lover named Kevin took Stan's 'Bullpen Bulletin' jibes as a secret communiqué that DC represented all that was evil and had to be destroyed."

— Mark Evanier

The coming of 25¢ comics: One budding speculator learned not to judge this comic book by its cover.

I actually think some of those comics read better today than they did then. When I go back now to the first year or so of Marvels, I can't help but mentally impose all the wonderful characterization of later years on those earlier issues. It's just like, when we now watch one of the many silent comedies that Laurel and Hardy made, we automatically imagine the voices we know from their later sound films. But, of course, the audiences that saw the silent films when they came out had no idea what Stan and Ollie sounded like.

The first year or so of what some call "The Marvel Age" had some pretty good comics and by the second or third year, they were really good. And getting better. They seemed amazingly unlike the DC comic books and some speculate that DC forced them to be as innovative as they were. Jack Liebowitz, who ran DC at the time, was known to be litigious when he perceived someone as infringing on the proprietary concepts of Superman and Batman.

Not long before Fantastic Four #1, the Archie folks had issued a Joe Simon-edited revival of a super-hero called The Shield. It's hard to see why that comic book, of all the super-heroes done before and since, alarmed Liebowitz but it did. Charging that certain key elements of Superman had been burgled, he demanded and got the discontinuation of the title. (John Goldwater was the man to see at Archie then. He may have folded too easily because he expected other publishers to react that way when he accused them of plagiarizing his Archie franchise.)

The first few years of Marvel's super-hero line were distributed by Independent News, which was owned by, among other folks, Jack Liebowitz. Therefore, it is reasonable to assume that Marvel had to be different from DC. Even leaving possible legal problems aside, if Marvel's super-hero line had too closely resembled DC's, Independent probably would not have distributed it.

Whatever the reasons, the line over which Stan presided was different. Before Marvel, a super-hero comic book was pretty much about one thing: catching the bad guy. After Marvel, what was going on in the hero's life and soul was at least as important, if not more interesting.

There was also a bold and graphic approach to the storytelling — largely the influence of Mr. Jack Kirby — that placed more reliance on exciting visuals. In a way, at Marvel, the pictures told the story and the captions and balloons amplified and expanded the story being told visually. (At DC, it was more the case that the captions and balloons told the story and the pictures then illustrated the copy.)

A big, growing excitement came about because of the rapport that Marvel established with its fans, positioning itself, intentionally or not, as the young Turk of the comic industry. DC was the established entity; it bragged about how long it had been publishing Action Comics. It also reminded you, in subtle and unnecessary ways, that they were grown-ups and you weren't.

Stan was no younger than your average DC editor, but he immediately put himself on a first-name basis with the readers. The result was that the DCs read like your parents were telling you a story and the Marvels read like your buddy was telling you a story. Guess which one most kids came to prefer.

Some of that was in the stories, for which artists like Kirby and Steve Ditko must get some credit. But a lot of it was in the letter pages, the cover copy, and even in the house advertising. And for that — for creating that chummy rapport with the readers — Stan Lee must get all the credit. Marvel had some great comics but, as a company, it also had a personality.

This created a brand-name loyalty that has certainly remained unmatched among fans of any other company at any other time. In later years, we would speak of the so-called "Marvel Zombies." They are lately becoming extinct, but, in their day, they would buy everything that said "Marvel" at the upper left, even Marvels they did not particularly enjoy. (Worse, they would shun comics by any other publisher, including many they might have enjoyed and including many done by the same writers and artists whose work they could not miss when Marvel issued it.)

The biggest Marvel Zombie I ever encountered was back around '68, back before we called them that, back when Stan was gently chiding his competitors with the label "Brand Echh."

Today, fundamentalists charge that rock music contains hidden entreaties to take drugs or have sex — as if teen-agers are only going to think of those things if some rapper suggests them. Back in the late '60s, a local Marvel-lover named Kevin took Stan's "Bullpen Bulletin" jibes as a secret communiqué that DC represented all that was evil and had to be destroyed. This, Kevin attempted to bring about by sabotaging DC sales on our local newsstands.

My friends and I bought our comics at two stores — Pico Drugs and — appropriately enough — a store called Super Drugs. (Honest to God, it just dawned on me now what a weird thing it was to name a pharmacy "Super Drugs," especially in the '60s.) The comics came out on Tuesdays and Thursdays and, after school, we'd have to race to one or the other and pray we got there before Kevin.

Kevin despised DC comics. They stunk, and anyone who bought one was a total idiot, end of argument. To him, everything about DC was loathsome and its thoroughly untalented writers and artists were the enemy, each of them unfit to trim the facial hair of the great Stan Lee, let alone work on his comics.

One of the great shocks of Kevin's youthful life was when he fell in love with the work of a new Marvel artist named Adam Austin. He proclaimed Austin to be the greatest comics artist of all time and was horrified to learn, months later, that Adam Austin was a phony name for Gene Colan, an artist who (shudder) had been drawing for DC. I think Kevin seriously considered telegraphing Stan in New York and warning him that he had a viper in his bullpen.

To help Stan in his holy quest to rid the world of DC Comics, Kevin would deface the new DCs when they came in. He'd get to the store before us and, after grabbing up that day's Marvel releases, he'd then put a tiny tear or crease in every newly-arrived DC. It was usually not a big one; usually just enough that you wouldn't want to buy that comic book for your collection. Since the next closest source of new funny books involved a long bus ride to the Pico-Robertson newsstand, I sometimes opted to purchase the copy least-damaged at Kevin's hands.

But even that wasn't always possible. One time, in some DC title, one of their editors made a remark about Marvel imitating their titles, and Kevin saw crimson. War had been declared. For weeks after, he would shred and crumple every DC in reprisal; we'd get to Super Drugs and find all the new World's Finest wadded into little balls. It led to a lot of bus rides down to Pico-Robertson.

Each comics day after school, we'd have to guess which establishment Kevin would hit and then try to get to the other one first. Often, I'd go to Super Drugs, find the new Flash reduced to confetti and then hurry over to Pico Drugs, only to find Kevin had made a second stop. Reporting him to the management of either store did no good; comics weren't an important enough profit item that they wanted to police their shelves. In fact, I think all the hassle was what caused Super Drugs to finally remove their comics rack.

Kevin finally outsmarted himself. At the time, Marvel had a couple of reprint titles with the then-hefty cover price of 25¢. Everything else was 15¢.

Today, those amounts seem statistically insignificant, but, back then, that dime meant a lot. Most of the local fans would buy the 15-centers but not the reprint titles like Marvel Tales and Marvel Collectors' Item Classics. Kevin, being the Marvel Zombie Supreme, bought them all. (So did Evanier, who was dumb enough to buy everything that came out from every company.)

Then along came Marvel Super-Heroes, which was a 25¢ reprint title that featured a new story in its lead position. This presented a die-hard dilemma to the fans who'd decided to cross the 25¢ reprint titles off their shopping lists. Hard to imagine, but this was quite the decision for many — at least until Captain Marvel was announced.

Captain Marvel was a new hero with an old name — a new Stan Lee concoction, drawn by the noted quisling Gene Colan and making his debut in Marvel Super-Heroes #12. Today, new heroes are introduced often, and first issues are no great occasion. In fact, at some companies, second issues are becoming special events.

At the time, though, most of the local Marvel fans had not seen a "first issue" — even a first issue numbered #12 — in their entire collecting days. So this was an eagerly anticipated event and even many who'd taken a blood oath to not patronize 25¢ comics decided they had to pony up for this one.

The day it was scheduled to come out, we all hurried to Pico Drugs and Super Drugs, only to find that Kevin had been there first. That day's DC comic books resembled what's left after Rip Taylor performs, and the Marvel Super-Heroes comics had all been purchased. All of them.

We found him out in front of Super Drugs, smugly displaying 20 copies of the coveted new Stan Lee masterpiece — 10 from each store — representing a massive investment of five whole dollars. There were, of course, more copies available at other newsstands around LA but at right that moment, it felt like Kevin had the only copies in the world. We argued that he had a moral responsibility to sell us each one.

"All right," he said. "For 50¢ each."

Gasps were heard. And threats. And comparisons of Kevin's family members to certain lower forms of life. The fellows who'd had to brace themselves for the concept of paying 25¢ for a comic book were practically catatonic. These guys wouldn't have paid 50¢ for the title if Gene Colan had come to their homes and personally hand-drawn each copy.

We all agreed to boycott Kevin. "Suit yourself," he shrugged. "Some day, these comic books will be worth a fortune."

Being more interested in the content than the commerce, I asked Kevin if I could have a peek at one. I was furious at him but eager to get a glimpse of this new Marvel creation. "OK," he said. "Long as your hands are clean."

He handed over a copy and I examined a very exciting cover by Colan. Then I opened it and found myself staring at a reprint of an old Ditko Spider-Man story. I flipped through the comic book but could only find more reprints — no sign of the origin of the new Captain Marvel.

Then I realized what I had here. The Marvel Tales title, reprinting old Ditko Spideys, had come out the same day. I had just purchased a copy. But inside Kevin's Marvel Super-Heroes was the insides of the current Marvel Tales. The printer had screwed up.

I, of course, loudly pointed this out and Kevin quickly examined each of his beloved 20 copies. They were all the same. It turned out that Kevin had not purchased 20 copies of the new Marvel Super-Heroes with the debut of Captain Marvel. Kevin had actually purchased 20 copies of the new Marvel Tales that had been published with the wrong cover.

We all began howling with delight as the DC-hater raced back into Super Drugs to demand his money back on the faulty 10 he'd purchased there. "All sales final," he was told. And as he argued to no avail, he could see us all through the window, laughing at him, pointedly exaggerating what a jerk he was to squander five entire American dollars on worthless, misprinted reprint books. Later, Pico Drugs also refused to return his money.

I made the R.T.D. run to Pico-Robertson where, after giving each an internal inspection, I purchased a pile of bonafide issues of Marvel Super-Heroes #12. The next day at school, I sold them to everyone who wanted one, except Kevin. At cover price.

I was going to offer to sell him one for 50¢, but it turned out that Kevin, feeling cheated by the comic-book line he had loved so, had decided to give up comics for good. I could probably figure out the exact month if I looked back on my DC collection — I still have all mine — and noted when my copies stopped having creases and small tears in the covers.

At that age, I think I held a little of this against Stan. It was, of course, not his fault at all but it took a while for me to see this and to accept his cult of personality as truly an amazing accomplishment.

Stan inspired loyalty in young strangers all across the nation. To this day, when I meet people in the 35-50 age bracket and they find out I'm involved in comics, I can almost count on someone asking if I've met or know what's become of Stan Lee.

I'm proud to say that I have met Stan Lee. In our next installment, I will tell you about the first time that happened — and how I became a "young, zingy, with-it guy."

Profile: Claypool Comics

"We're the publisher of hidden treasures," said Claypool Marketing Director David Seidman. "The current market is great for creator-owned projects. Look at The Crow, Sin City, Bone. We publish Peter David's Soulsearchers and Company and Richard Howell's Deadbeats."

"The market's great for certain licensed titles, such as X-Files and Star Wars. We publish Elvira, Mistress of the Dark."

"The market's great for big-name talent, like Kurt Busiek, George Pérez, and Peter David, all of whom we've published. Not to mention experienced pros like Dave Cockrum and Jim Mooney, or our own discoveries: Amanda Conner was with us before she did Vampirella; Paul Dini before Batman Adventures; James Fry before The New Shadowhawk; Neil Vokes before The Mask Adventures; and Matt Haley before Ghost."

"If you didn't know we published comics like these by creators like these — well, that's why they're hidden treasures."

Claypool Comics was founded in early 1992 by two friends: arts patron and comics fan Ed Via and comics writer-artist Richard Howell. Via, now Claypool's publisher and editor in chief, wanted to publish comics based on a particular licensed property, but the licensing deal fell through. Instead, the partners acquired the license for an Elvira, Mistress of the Dark comic book as the foundation for their company.

Elvira #1 was released in May 1993. Later that year, Claypool launched its Fear City line of comics: Soulsearchers, Deadbeats, and the mini-series Phantom of Fear City, which are all set in the town of Mystic Grove, known locally as Fear City. Though each title had its own tone, cast, and self-contained stories, the characters could cross over into other Fear City titles.

The company's current line-up consists of Elvira, starring the video hostess in tales that parody pop culture, by Busiek, Fry, and others; Deadbeats, a punk vampire series in which bloodsuckers terrorize a small town, by Howell and Ricardo Villagran; Soulsearchers, a satirical look the adventures of a team of occult investigators, by Howell, David Cockrum, and Conner.

Claypool has already issued trade paperback collections of the early Soulsearchers and Elvira issues, and has plans for a Deadbeats collection as Hello, darlings! I hope you'll enjoy my latest adventures! I'm Elvira, Mistress of the Dark — and here's some other folks you may see here.

Elvira introduces the major characters in her comic book from Claypool each issue on the inside front cover.

well. Special plans have also been laid for the upcoming 50th issue of Elvira, Seidman said, as well as for Claypool's fifth anniversary in 1997. "We'll be celebrating at the summer conventions."

Right now, Seidman added, Claypool has no plans to expand its line. "Howell and Via believe in keeping the company at a manageable size so as to maintain quality control. But, like all entrepreneurs, they are always coming up with new ideas, so new products are not out of the question."

"We require original plot concepts, laced with surprises and emotional payoffs," Howell said. "We also want stories with inner consistency and thematic unity. We want to produce stories that delight and reward the thoughtful reader's attention and commitment. They should also be fun!"

Claypool's small office staff is divided among three locations: Sales and marketing; editorial; and production and distribution offices. In addition to founders Via and Howell (who also s as Claypool's editor and as a ter on some of its titles) and dman, who heads Claypool's as and marketing office in West llywood, Calif., Claypool ffers include Production and Distribution Chief Cat Yronwode, Financial Manager Sandy Via, and Design Consultant Jesse Reyes.

Batman is tricked and treated in 'The Long Halloween'

"Each issue, a different Batman villain takes center stage and the mystery is which one — if any — is Holiday."

— Jeph Loeb

By Jeff Lang
For DC Comics

Gotham City — it's a crazy town. Always has been, most likely always will be. Any long-time resident will tell you that, although they'll always add something else for free (probably the only thing you'll get for free in Gotham). The town was different once. Oh, sure, it's always been dangerous, but there was a time when you could put a name to the things that might get you killed — a gangster with a tommy gun, a punk with a stiletto, a thug with a Saturday Night Special.

Then, all the freaks came to town: the crocodile man, the fiend with two faces, the plant lady, and, worst of all, the laughing killer himself. Living in Gotham — all these monsters, masks, and things going bump in the night — it's like Halloween every night of the year. They're all there — sometimes in the nuthouse, sometimes out.

And, of course, there's the Bat. Funny how they all showed up about the same time.

There's probably a story there, and Jeph Loeb and Tim Sale are the guys who are going to tell it. It's called Batman: The Long Halloween, a 13-issue maxi-series that begins, appropriately enough, this October and ends next October. The first and last issues will be presented as 48-page prestige-format issues, while the 11 issues in between are in Miraweb format with cardstock covers.

Loeb and Sale are no strangers to Batman, having produced three Legends of the Dark Knight Halloween Specials.

"After the success of the first three Batman Halloween Specials," Loeb said, "Tim and I were ready to hang up our cowls and say good-bye to The Dark Knight. But then a story, one which could be epic in its undertaking, occurred to us. It was Archie Goodwin who gave it a name: The Long Halloween."

Set in the days just after Bruce Wayne first became Batman, The Long Halloween is the story of several families that are integral to Gotham City: the Waynes, the Dents, the Gordons, and the Falcones. In the course of the tale, Loeb and Sale disclose some tragic and painful episodes from the Dark Knight's history, but the plot thread that ties it all together is a series of murders committed by a mysterious killer named Holiday.

The Long Halloween does not refer to a single story set on a single Halloween night, but rather to the way the killer turns every holiday into a night of terror. "Each issue, a different Batman villain takes center stage," Loeb explained. "And the mystery is which one — if any — is Holiday. Since Batman is the World's Greatest Detective, we wanted to create a mystery. There are clues in every issue and, hopefully, it won't be too obvious."

For Halloween, Catwoman takes center stage. In the Thanksgiving story ("Our tribute to The Usual Suspects," said Sale), it's Solomon Grundy. Both Christmas and New Year's belong to The Joker ("Because he has to tell the New Year's joke," said Loeb). Then, for Valentine's Day, Poison Ivy appears, and Catwoman returns. April Fool's Day, appropriately enough, belongs to The Riddler; Mother's Day, inappropriately enough, to The Scarecrow; and Father's Day to The Mad Hatter.

"Then there's the Fourth of July, Labor Day, and finally Hal-

"... there's no murder in August, because there are no holidays that month."

— Jeph Loeb

loween again," said Loeb. "I'm not going to tell you who the villains are for those issues, although there's no murder in August, because there are no holidays that month."

And just to remove the obvious answer right from the beginning, Loeb said, "Holiday is not Calendar Man, although Calendar Man is an important character in the story. I began by saying that Holiday was Calendar Man, but too many people told me that he was too goofy to use. Instead, Calendar Man has a sort of 'Hannibal Lecter' role in the story. Batman and Gordon are trying to figure out what Holiday is doing, so they're relying on Calendar Man — who's in Arkham — to explain the importance of committing crimes on holidays."

But murder and festive occasions aren't the only things Loeb and Sale have on their minds. Essentially, The Long Halloween is the equivalent of a 15-issue story arc — definite elbow-stretching room. In addition to the mystery of Holiday, Loeb and Sale explore one of the most fascinating unexplored eras in the Dark Knight's history — the period when Gotham City mutated from a town ruled by gangsters into a stronghold for costumed freaks.

Loeb said, "Archie Goodwin encouraged us — because he loves the way Tim draws gangsters and film-noir details — to concentrate on the Year One period. Nobody had ever followed up on Frank Miller's and Dave Mazzucchelli's storyline about Falcone, who was known as The Roman. Archie is the one who asked, 'Is there something there?' And since The Godfather is my favorite movie, I was off and running."

In the period just prior to Jim Gordon's coming to Gotham (which is, for the uninitiated, a major plotline in Batman: Year One), Gotham was ruled by the mobs.

"It wasn't until Jim Gordon came to town," Loeb explained, "which coincides with Batman's arrival on the scene — that someone said, 'No.'"

Unfortunately, a short time after Gordon and Batman began their campaign against crime, a new kind of criminal appeared on the scene. When apparently motiveless mass murderers like the Joker show up, all the old rules go out the window. Is it because Batman showed up? Could there be a costumed villain without a costumed crimefighter?

"There are two different opinions about that in the story," Loeb said. "First, there's Gordon's opinion — and it's not a new one — that because Batman was there, these people were attracted — the idea that for every good there is an evil."

"Batman's opinion, and I believe this to be the correct one, is that lunatics existed before he came along and would have taken advantage of the situation if he hadn't shown up. Things would have been much worse."

Strangely enough, the gangsters agree with Gordon. "The gangsters in this story believe very strongly that they lost control of the town when Batman arrived, and these freaks and lunatics are only there because of him," Loeb said. "They think if they could just get rid of Batman, everything would go back to the way it was."

"In the Christmas issue, The Joker pays a visit to Sal 'The Boss' Maroni, whose fate and legend is that he's the man who threw the acid in Harvey Dent's face. After The Joker leaves, Batman questions him, asking, 'What did the Joker want from you?' and Sal's response is, 'I don't know. I don't know what any of you want. You're all a bunch of lunatics. The town is filled with lunatics.'"

The third major plotline is the story of how Jim Gordon, Batman, Harvey Dent, and Bruce Wayne forged a partnership — and later a friendship — to fight the Falcone family, and how that friendship was destroyed.

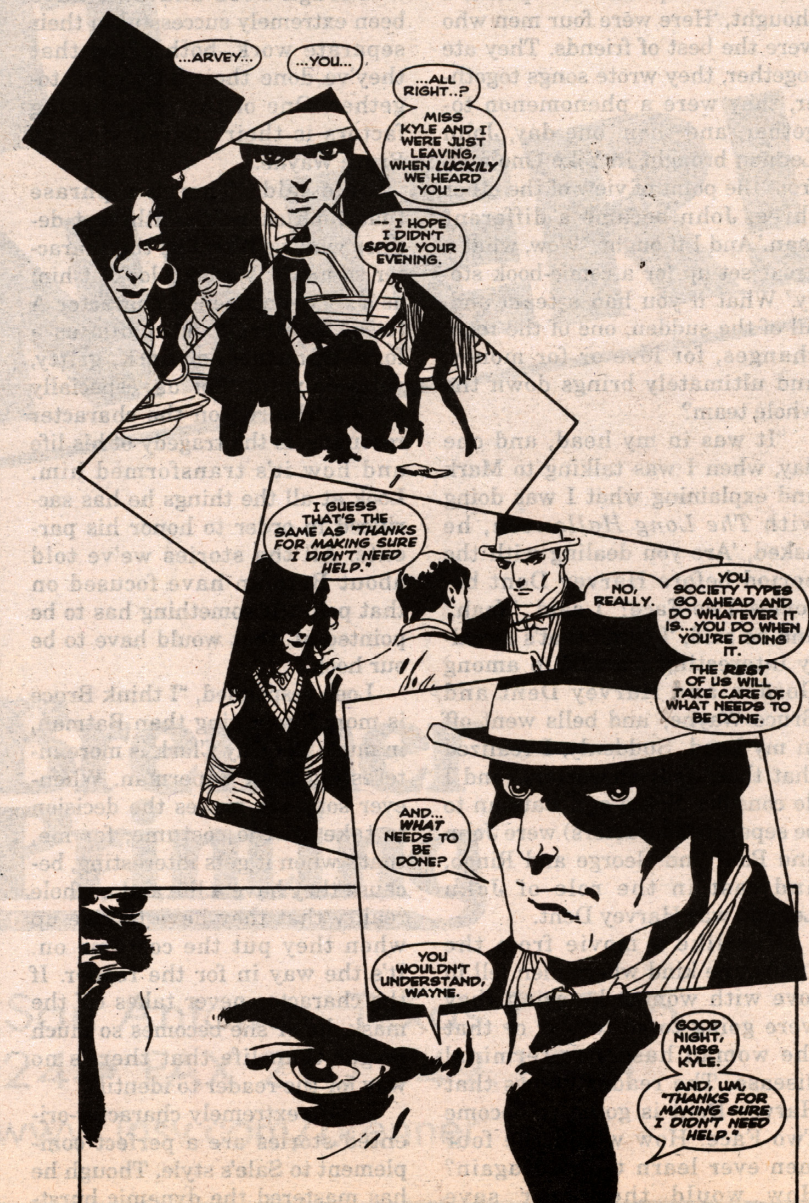

Loeb said he sends a big "thank you" to Flash and Kingdom Come's Mark Waid for the development of this plot thread.

"I was watching The Beatles

"Archie Goodwin encouraged us — because he loves the way Tim draws gangsters and film-noir details — to concentrate on the 'Year One' period. Nobody had ever followed up on Frank Miller's and Dave Mazzucchelli's storyline about Falcone, who was known as The Roman."

— Jeph Loeb

"I realized that these four characters (and I do consider Bruce and Batman to be separate characters) were John and Paul and George and Ringo, and cast in the role of John Lennon was Harvey Dent."

— Jeph Loeb

Batman hurts Falcone's men physically, above, and financially, with the aid of Harvey Dent, at right.

"My favorite page in the first issue is the one where Batman and Catwoman are talking on the roof across from Gordon's office."

— Tim Sale

"I think Bruce is more interesting than Batman, in much the way Clark is more interesting than Superman."

— Jeph Loeb

Anthology last year and (I admit this is a simplistic viewpoint) I thought, 'Here were four men who were the best of friends. They ate together, they wrote songs together, they were a phenomenon together, and then, one day, John Lennon brought in Yoko Ono and, from the point of view of the other three, John became a different man.' And I thought, 'Wow, what a great set-up for a comic-book story.' What if you had a team and, all of the sudden, one of the team changes, for love or for money, and ultimately brings down the whole team?

"It was in my head, and one day, when I was talking to Mark and explaining what I was doing with The Long Halloween, he asked, 'Are you dealing with the period before Harvey Dent becomes Two-Face?' I said, 'Yeah,' and he said, 'I think that's a really interesting friendship among Gordon and Harvey Dent and Bruce Wayne,' and bells went off in my head. Suddenly, I realized that these four characters (and I do consider Bruce and Batman to be separate characters) were John and Paul and George and Ringo, and cast in the role of John Lennon was Harvey Dent.

"It's like a movie from the 1940s, the kind where men fell in love with women knowing they were going to go to war or that the woman has some terminal disease. The reader knows that Harvey Dent is going to become Two-Face. How would the four men ever learn to trust again? How would they ever save Gotham City?"

Though Loeb and Sale have been extremely successful in their separate work, both agree that they've done their best work together. One of the contributing factors is their shared view on Bruce Wayne.

Sale said, "There's a phrase that Jeph came up with that defines why we both like the character so much. We both look at him as a very sentimental character. A lot of creators look at him as a force of nature, or dark, gritty, yatta-da-yatta. For us, especially for me, the reason the character resonates is the tragedy of his life and how it's transformed him. Look at all the things he has sacrificed in order to honor his parents. All the stories we've told about Batman have focused on that point. If something has to be pointed at, that would have to be our hook."

Loeb responded, "I think Bruce is more interesting than Batman, in much the way Clark is more interesting than Superman. Whenever someone makes the decision to take off the costume, for me, that's when it gets interesting, because they have a life and a whole reality that they have to give up when they put the costume on. It's the way in for the reader. If the character never takes off the mask, he or she becomes so much larger than life that there's no way for the reader to identify."

Loeb's extremely character-oriented stories are a perfect complement to Sale's style. Though he has mastered the dynamic bursting-off-the-page style needed to do super-hero comics ("It's something I only recently learned to do," he said.), his primary interests are the use of body language and pacing to define character, the sort of techniques usually associated with more introspective stories.

"My favorite page in the first issue," Sale said, "is the one where Batman and Catwoman are talking on the roof across from Gordon's office. It's basically a scene of two people talking, so what do you do with it? He's acting all stiff and stoic and she's got her face in his face, like, 'Come on, let's go!' He's interested in her and she knows he's interested in her, but he can't allow himself to express that. Showing how people interact in those situations — that's very interesting to me and I think I do it well."

Though both Loeb and Sale are pleased with the caliber of the work they're turning out, they know they're toiling in the shadows of some of the greats, including the aforementioned Miller and Mazzucchelli's Batman: Year One, and, of course, the "Big One," Batman: The Dark Knight. Significantly, the first issue of Batman: The Long Halloween is coming out the same month that the Dark Knight 10th Anniversary hoopla begins.

"When I started seeing the marketing material," Loeb said, "I was very flattered. Essentially, it says, '10 years ago we did this, and now we're doing this,' I wrote a note to Paul Levitz that basically said, 'Aw, shucks.' At the end of the day, I won't blame anyone but us if it doesn't work, because DC has done everything to promote the series properly and give us the kind of creative freedom that typically only happens with small, independent presses."

But, Gotham City (that crazy town) has a peculiar effect on some people — it brings out the best in them. Like a certain caped and cowed character, Jeph Loeb and Tim Sale are living proof of that axiom.

When you are selling golden and silver age comics, there is only one clear choice.

METROPOLIS*

* Metropolis is the biggest dealer of vintage comic books in the world.

873 Broadway, Suite 201, New York, NY 10003 212-260-4147 Fax: 212-260-4304

"People here are very sweet, but there are times when I need to concentrate. Being a sex symbol hampers my work."

— Actor Brad Pitt in Argentina, where a bevy of young ladies had gathered to watch him make a movie.

"... tick ... tick ... tick ..."

— Pitt's 15 minutes.

My 8-year-old son Eddie was somewhat less than delighted at Dad's telling the CBG-reading world about his infatuation with one of his teachers.

I, of course, refer to the celebrated butt-pinching incident as reported in this column a few weeks ago. He has stated emphatically that the teacher in question, a veritable crone of 27, is too old to be his girlfriend. However, Eddie then added, "Now, if she were 11," thereby offering some small hope to older women everywhere.

• The Amalgam Age of Comics: The DC Comics Collection ($12.95) gathers together the six Amalgam titles produced by DC during the one brief week of that shared (with Marvel) universe's existence.

I took advantage of the convenient trade-paperback repackaging to reread the six stories contained within.

Most of them were every bit as good this second time around. Legends of the Dark Claw and Super Soldier were better. Only one, Assassins, the humor in which seemed forced and even a bit mean-spirited, came up short for me.

Five for six is still a pretty good average and, considering this collection includes the original covers and letters pages of the reprinted issues, some of the art from the Amalgam cards set, a new introduction by "M.M. Car-wald" (executive editor of Amalgam Comics), and a nifty wrap-around cover by Dave Gibbons, for close to the same price as those original six comics, I think it's also a pretty good buy. Accelerate!

• X-Files fans with a sense of humor have to seek out and read Animaniacs #19 (DC, $1.75). Said issue is a hilarious send-up of both the television program and the Topps Comics version of same. Would you believe a Miran Kim cover painting and framing sequence artwork by Charles Adlard? Believe it.

The Adlard pages surround two gloriously demented stories by Dave King, "Sheep" (starring The Warners) and "Little Green Mice" (Pinky and the Brain). The gags come fast and furious, with lots of in-jokes and superb laugh-out-loud visuals by Omar Aranda, Walter Carzon, and Scott McRae. Just the mere sight of Pinky as "Agent Dana Scowly" had me on the floor.

The spoof is out there. Go for it.

• The good folks at Acclaim Comics sent me a trio of "retailer review" copies of the upcoming relaunched Ninjak, Shadowman, and X-O Manowar. Unfortunately, these copies omit the last pages of the respective issues. A less congenial critic might retaliate by leaving off the last few words of his reviews.

"Reading X-O Manowar, I was reminded of ..."

"Ninjak is completely ..."

But that isn't what you, or they, expect from Tony "Heart as Big as All Outdoors" Isabella, so I'll do the best I can with the incomplete copies. This once.

Judging from what I've seen, Ninjak and X-O Manowar will be action-packed, fun comics.

Ninjak is by Kurt Busiek, Neil Vokes, and Michael Avon-Oeming and is the classic "boy meets video game; boy becomes video game" story. What I liked most about the young hero of this series is that I could accept him as a real kid. High marks to Busiek for pulling that trick off. If Ninjak can retain its mix of fantasy and reality, it's gonna be good.

X-O Manowar is by Mark Waid and Brian Augustyn, two of the very best writers in comics, with artists Sean Chen and Tom Ryder. As with Ninjak, the characters are the charm here. Waid and Augustyn got me interested in them from the get-go, and now I want to know what happens to them next. If they can hold my interest, I'll be back issue after issue.

Last, and very certainly least, is Shadowman. Give this one a big pass, my friends. It's just another boring, drab, dystopic downer of a comic book. All shock and precious little substance.

Been there, read that, won't buy it anymore.

After this first inning, the score is Acclaim 2, Recycle Bin 1. This is looking to be an exciting game.

• A couple of Tips readers have asked for the latest news on actress Margot Kidder, best known around these parts for her fine performances as Lois Lane in the four Superman movies. I'm happy to oblige them.

Although her plans to appear on Broadway in Stieglitz Loves O'Keeffe fell through, Kidder made a well-received appearance on an episode of NBC's Boston Common and there has been some talk of her returning on a semi-regular basis. She is also working on her autobiography, Calamities.

There was also a report of her playing Lois Lane's mother on Lois & Clark, but that seems unlikely at this time.

However, I think it would be a hoot if it turned out Lois was named after an aunt, played by Kidder, a globe-trotting adventuress who inspired her in her younger days.

Two Lois Lanes? Clark wouldn't stand a chance!

• The best comic-book story of 1996 is "Welcome to Astro City" by Kurt Busiek, Brent E. Anderson, and Will Blyberg. It appeared in Kurt Busiek's Astro City Vol. 2 #1 (Homage, $2.50), the start of this Eisner Award-winning title's second volume.

"Welcome" is the story of a family's first day in Astro City and so much more. It is the story of a man trying to get on with his life in the aftermath of a personal loss and make a new start for himself and his daughters. It is the story of the basic good and hope and courage that are the natural birthrights of mankind.

It is a story of heroes, only some of whom fly through the air in resplendent costumes.

The first volume of Kurt Busiek's Astro City is available in trade paperback. It is already on its second printing. For that matter, the first issue of the second volume is now in a second printing as well. You may learn slow, but, God bless you, you do learn well.

Kurt Busiek's Astro City. Comic books just don't get better than this.

• While we're at it, let's talk about Leave It To Chance #1 by James Robinson, Paul Smith, and Jeromy Cox. It's the second book from Jim Lee's Homage Comics imprint and the freshest debut since Astro City. If you want to cut to the chase, you should buy this first issue the nanosecond you lay eyes on it and put in an order for every issue after that. This is the good stuff.

Here's the long version:

Chance Falconer is the 14-year-old only child of Lucas Falconer, the mystic protector of Devil's Echo. She thinks she's ready to begin training as the next mystic protector. Dad thinks that's a job better left to her son. Men.

Right from the start, Robinson pulls out two of his greatest strengths as a writer. He gives us these wonderful characters in an equally wonderful city. He did and does it in Starman for DC. He may be doing it even better here.

Meanwhile, Smith pulls a new, lean, and very cool style from his artistic bag of tricks. I see a little Russ Manning here and a little something European and a flash of this and that. All of which works remarkably well, aided and abetted by Cox's coloring, in bringing Chance and her world to life.

Let's also take note of the relative novelty of a comic book with a heroine who doesn't have blood-spattered breasts as big as her head; who doesn't carry the requisite large gun or sword, and who doesn't wear leather, spandex, or a leather or spandex thong.

Gee, do you think Chance might be just a little more appealing to female readers than, say, Lady Cleavage? You think?

Leave It To Chance #1 ($2.50) went back to the presses for a second printing. I'm buying an extra copy every issue for my own daughter. You need more of a recommendation?

• Former O.J. Simpson attorney Barry Scheck could soon star in his own television show. With independent producer Globalvision, Scheck is developing Falsely Accused/Wrongly Convicted. It's a "reality" program which will focus on getting supposedly innocent people out of jail.

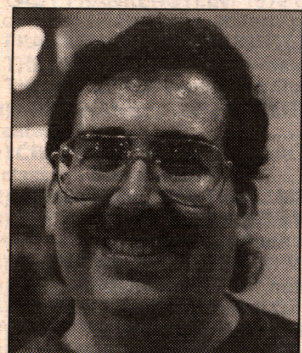

Let's review for a moment. Simpson walks the streets a free man due, in part, to the efforts of Scheck.

So I have to ask, is this really the guy we want working to get anyone else out of prison?

See you next week.

Tony Isabella missed last week's issue because he had just a scintilla too much fun at the big National Dictionary Day bash Oct. 16. He promises to be more judicious Oct. 27, when he attends the Change-Your-Clock-Back Day celebration.

If you have comments, party invitations, or review items for our favorite Tipster, you can send them to: Tony's Tips, P.O. Box 1502, Medina, OH 44258.

• Since the introduction of the trade paperback Paradox Press line called "Factoid Books" began, I have encouraged readers to purchase them for themselves — and as gifts for family and friends. They're a natural, reader-friendly introduction to the art form of comics and to the art form's potential as a memorable informant. They also serve as anthologies of the work of a number of talented comics writers and artists.

My favorite in the ("suggested for mature readers") series remains the first, and, if you don't have it, you should order a copy today from your friendly comics shop: The Big Book of Urban Legends. Others in the "Big Book of ..." series are Conspiracies, Death, Freaks, Little Criminals, and Weirdos.

The latest is The Big Book of Hoaxes (1996, $14.95, black-and-white paperback, ISBN 1-56389-252-9) with a cover overline of "True tales of the greatest lies ever told!" and it is second only to Urban Legends as "must" reading. Why? Because, like that book, it will teach you how to tip yourself off when you are being conned. From the Badger Game to the Pigeon Drop, from Rosie Ruiz to Frances Griffiths and Elsie Wright, from William Randolph Hearst to Clifford Irving — these are summaries of cases in which hoaxes deceived believers (some of whom lost large amounts of money as a result).

Amusingly, the book itself perpetuates at least one hoax. Steve Vance's "The Balloon Hoax of Edgar Allan Poe" (art by George Freeman) concludes, "The momentary success of the hoax did little to reverse the tragic course of Poe's life. He drank himself to death five years later at the age of 40." This view of Poe's death (and a similar entry in the Weirdos volume) is only the latest rendition of the hoax created by Victorian novelist Rufus Griswold, who hated Poe, who claimed that Poe had appointed him Poe's literary executor, and who wrote the scurrilous Poe obituary which was accepted by too many as "official."

(While I had been aware of all that, serendipity brought more information via the Chicago Tribune for Oct. 11, in which a fascinating article by its Washington bureau's Michael Kilian suggests [thanks to Dr. R. Michael Benitez' diagnosis in a "clinical pathologic conference" in which he analyzed the information from Poe's examining doctor without knowing the identity of the patient] that Poe actually died — alcohol-free — of rabies.)

But all this merely substantiates the premise of the Big Book series: Proceed with caution. Especially if you find yourself with someone who claims to have found a wallet full of money with no I.D.

• Many long-time readers have been calling for the kind of super-hero comics they grew up with in the early days of the Silver Age — comics, moreover, they could buy without breaking their budgets. Well, month in, month out, Untold Tales of Spider-Man has been featuring solid, freestanding Spidey stories with beginning, middle, and end — written by one of the top writers in comics today, Kurt Busiek. For example, "The Battle for the Daily Bugle" (Nov 96, Marvel, 99¢) is pencilled by Pat Olliffe and inked by Al Vey and Pam Eklund; it features a threat to J. Jonah Jameson and, in a different way, to Betty. Assistant Editor Glenn Greenberg notes the necessity for Busiek to deal more with new characters and less with classic villains. "We feel it would be stretching credibility way too far to have Spidey face the same dozen or so villains, again and again, in countless battles that have never been mentioned until now. We fully intend to remain faithful to the canon..."

So, if you're one of those long-time readers and really want to support what you say you want, pick up this series. Consider, too, buying additional copies for people who used to read comics and for kids you hope to get into the habit of reading for pleasure.

• Joyce Greenholdt has already recommended Linda Medley's Castle Waiting: The Curse of Brambly Hedge (1996, Olivo, $5.95, black and white paperback, ISBN 0-9651852-0-6), but I wanted to add my voice of endorsement. You should be able to get this via your comics shop; if not, you can reach Olivo at P.O. Box 1012, Petaluma, CA 94953. There is one speech balloon that contains one noun some parents may object to, so I suppose it's "PG." But life is "PG," and this is a delightful fantasy — a broadening of a famous story with a (duh!) brambly hedge and a castle waiting.

Medly puts modern touches to an old tale — and supplies clear storytelling in both art and script. The typeset lettering is excellent — and may serve to help mainstream readers who sometimes can't get past hand-lettering. Hey, it would even make a great (if expensive) coloring book.

• Are you a Walt Kelly fan? He drew Pogo, which started in comic books and then migrated to the realm of newspaper strips. But he did lots of other illustration and cartooning, and The Fort Mudge Most is a fanzine devoted to retrieving and publishing Kelly's work for the circle of devotees who treasure his sure brush line, horse sense, and brilliant writing.

The Fort Mudge Most is bimonthly from Spring Hollow Books, 6908 Wentworth Ave. So., Richfield, MN 55423, and subscriptions are $25 for six issues. The editor is Steve Thompson (no relation), and #52 (August 96) features lots of Kelly "Brownies" material, while #53 (October 96) is packed with all Kelly's illustrations for Charles Ellis and Frank Weir's 1956 book I'd Rather Be President: A Handbook for Reluctant Candidates. You won't be able to get a copy before Election Day, but you'll have time to enjoy it before Inauguration Day, at any rate. Don't miss it.

GOLDEN AGE NEWLY PURCHASED KEYS

Listed below are some of the Golden Age keys we've acquired in the past couple months. Many are priced very reasonably given current market conditions!

ADVENTURE COMICS #40 - EXTREMELY difficult to find DC key featuring the first appearance of Sandman. There have been no copies offered for a while, let alone in this price range. This copy has a strong appearance with restoration by Matt Wilson including spine rebuilding and page cleaning, among other restoration. A phenomenal book to own at an affordable price. Apparent VG/FN $8,000.00

BATMAN #2 - This issue is highlighted by a classic Joker story, and a scarcity level considerably higher than any other issue of the title. Quite nice copy with average spine wear, but excellent cover color and supple cream paper. Solid and attractive VG+ $2,500.00

CAPTAIN AMERICA COMICS #1 - One of the all-time great Golden Age keys featuring the first appearance of Cap, Bucky, the Red Skull, all under one of the all-time best Hitler covers! This copy has moderate professional cover restoration, but has nice cream pages, a great appearance, and a very reasonable price. Given the high demand for this book, it won't last long for this price! Apparent FN- $11,500.00

FLASH COMICS #1 - Highly significant Golden Age key features the first Flash, Hawkman, and Johnny Thunder. Comparatively, this book is much tougher to find than almost any of the other mainstream Golden Age keys. Book has been restored, but work is done very professionally and book has a beautiful appearance with cream pages. Great buy at $10,000.00

PLANET COMICS #1 - All-time great Fiction House number one issue; one of the most enduring and famous Golden Age titles. This is a nice, solid, unrestored copy with just average spine wear and nice light cream pages. Overall VG $2,000.00

SUB-MARINER COMICS #1 - One of the hottest Timely keys still remains a great buy at current levels. Classic cover with Subby tipping over a Nazi war boat. This copy has moderate restoration including spine repair and page cleaning by Matt Wilson, but has a gorgeous appearance. Apparent FN+ $4,500.00

SUPERMAN #1 - Currently the third most valuable comic book and considered by historians to be the second most historically significant of all comics, what more is there to say? This very strong copy has moderate restoration by Matt Wilson with outstanding, bright yellow cover and supple light cream paper. The spine has been reinforced and color touched, along with some back cover repairs. Compared to other restored copies currently on the market, this one blows them all away. Apparent VF $29,000.00

SALE TERMS: Please include $8.00 for postage and insurance. VISA/MC, checks, money orders accepted. Any items may be returned if customer calls within five days of receipt to notify us of return, and item is postmarked within five days of customer's receipt.

Marvel's stock car crashes

Marvel enters the rough-and-tumble world of NASCAR

The appearance of Spider-Man emblazoned on the hood of a stock car driven by Rob Gordon in the UAW-GM Quality 500 race at the Charlotte Motor Speedway in Charlotte, N.C., Oct. 6 was an indication of some new deals between Marvel Entertainment and NASCAR.

The Toy Biz/Racing for Kids car, partially sponsored by Toy Biz, also featured The Incredible Hulk's image on its trunk. Unfortunately, the original car crashed during practice and did not race, but the logos were moved to a rented car which crashed during the race.

Under a new agreement with NASCAR, Toy Biz will produce "action-feature mini-vehicles," remote-controlled vehicles, ride-ons, and motorized vehicles, as well as action figures and interactive CD-ROM products. The first products are scheduled to ship in winter 1997.

Co-sponsor Racing for Kids is a monthly magazine that promotes racing to children. The UAW-GM Quality 500 is part of the 31 weekend NASCAR Winston Cup championship.

Spider-Man really swings on MarvelMotion cards

Fleer/SkyBox has brought a new type of full-color 3-D animation to some of its trading cards. Dynamic Imaging Technology, developed by the Eastman Kodak Company, was first demonstrated by Fleer/SkyBox at the National Sports Collectors Convention in Anaheim, Calif., June 27.

Dynamic Imaging General Manager John Greve said, "At Anaheim, we observed a real sense of excitement generated by our technologies. Many show visitors told me that Kodak's technology had redefined the industry by providing truly high-quality motion imaging. Kodak's Dynamic Imaging Technology can combine visual elements and demonstrate built-in action that cannot be duplicated using conventional processes."

Fleer/SkyBox's MarvelMotion cards, part of its VirtualVision line, were produced by Kodak from computer images created by Fleer/SkyBox. Using the Dynamic Imaging Technology, the images were transformed into dimensional, full-color action scenes. By rotating the cards, collectors can make the image change.

For the National Sports Collectors Convention, Kodak produced a 16" x 20" backlit display of Spider-Man firing webbing to promote the MarvelMotion cards.

Uncle Scrooge Collectors International is mounting a campaign to have "Eureka! A Goose Egg Nugget!" by Carl Barks, the painting shown at left, featured on a United States or Canadian postage stamp commemorating the centennial of the Alaskan/Yukon Gold Rush of the late 1890s. A licensing agreement already exists between The Walt Disney Company and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and organizers of the campaign said they feel that a stamp would continue the spirit of collaboration between the United States and Canada.

For more information, contact Uncle Scrooge Collectors International President Rev. Ed Bergen, Immanuel Lutheran Church, 178 McHenry Ave., Crystal Lake, IL 60014, phone (815) 459-1441, fax (815) 459-1462.

The International Museum of Cartoon Art offers a number of items for holiday gift giving, including, at far left, mugs ($8.50), neon-colored rulers (94¢ each), and pencils ($1.25) all bearing the Museum's logo. A hand-crafted wooden replica of the Museum, shown at near left, is available as a Christmas ornament for $15.

A white T-shirt with a caricature of General Half-Track from Beetle Bailey is shown at right. The 100% cotton shirt has the Museum's logo embroidered on the sleeve, is available in adult sizes, and retails for $39.95. A golf shirt is also available with the Museum's "Globey Guy" mascot embroidered on the front. A red version is shown at right, with white and black versions also available. All three versions retail for $28.

HEROES is proud to announce the purchase of the warehouse inventory of the historic Comic Collector Shop in San Jose, founded by the late Bob Siddebottom in the mid 1960's. This purchase, consisting of nearly half a million unsorted copies of comic books, magazines, books, fanzines, and price guides from 1967 to 1987, represents the largest find of high grade material from this period ever reported. In this ad, and in the many to follow, this material is being offered to the public for the very first time! Watch for future ads, and send us a want list...due to the volume of material, no catalog will be published. Thanks, and happy hunting! Alan Bahr, Owner.

Tuesday, Oct. 8 — I arrived in Spain for the Salon Internacional del Comic. Lately I've been trying to cut back on comic con appearances, to concentrate more on work and family. But hey — it's Spain. Can't pass that up.

JUGGLING Multiple Titles

Brent Frankenhoff
CBG Associate Editor

I recently picked up another of the books published by Byron Preiss based on Marvel Comics characters.

Spider-Man and The Incredible Hulk: Rampage by Danny Fingerioth and Eric Fein is the first part of "Doom's Day," a multi-part team-up series dealing with Doctor Doom's quest for an unstoppable army. There is no indication of how many books there will be in the series nor who will team up in future books.

I enjoyed the book, especially the depth of characterization that Fingerioth gave to many of the characters such as Spider-Man, Flash Thompson, and Felicia Hardy. I did not find his work on a par with Peter David's when it came to The Hulk and Betty Banner; that may have been because I was comparing the two styles too closely. Fingerioth did a fine job of portraying The Hulk's immense strength and Doctor Doom's looming menace.

Flash Thompson was one of the standout characters in the book, with Fingerioth showing facets of the character that had never been shown in the comics.

I am looking forward to more books in this series, but would like to know who will be starring in them. Perhaps a teaser chapter at the end of the next book previewing the following book could be considered.

Unfortunately, my command of Spanish is limited to a couple of words I picked up from watching Zorro, and, of course, "Hasta la vista, baby" (not to mention the ability to say "Hello, my name is Inigo Montoya, you killed my father, prepare to die" in a bad Castilian accent).

But I suffer from the same conceit that most Americans do, one that is oddly both self-aggrandizing and self-deflating. My reasoning is that everyone is going to be able to speak English because it's such an important language and because everyone in Spain, from infancy to dotage, is smarter than I am and can thoroughly master two languages while I'm limited to my native tongue and a smattering of French.

The convention was being held in Gijon, situated in an area called Asturias. It had been highly recommended to me by Walt Simonson, who apparently attended a previous year. Unfortunately, my plane got into Madrid at 10 a.m. and there was no connecting flight until 4 p.m. The notion of cooling my heels for six hours didn't appeal to me. Even though it was a five-hour car trip, I found the thought of driving preferable. So I rented a car and made the drive up.

I stopped for gas. The attendant didn't speak English. I managed to struggle through getting my tank filled. As I pulled out, I called, "Hasta la vista, baby!" I got a blank stare.

I stopped to try and get something to eat at a crowded roadside cafe. I got a menu written entirely in Spanish with no translation. The waiter didn't speak English, nor did the maitre d', or anyone else around me. And I, brain that I am, forgot to bring the Berlitz guide Myra had so strongly recommended I take. I grabbed a bag of potato chips from a vending machine and left, shouting, "Hasta la vista, baby!" behind me. Blank stares.

I was getting worried. This might not be as easy as I'd thought.

Still, the directions written out for me by the convention organizers were quite clear. On the last leg of my journey — a trip that took me across half of Spain, including farmland, through mountains, past lovely scenery — I passed a large city called Oviedo. Fifteen minutes later, I was at the outskirts of Gijon. According to the little map of Gijon, I was no more than five minutes from the hotel. I was supposed to get to an intersection, where I could either go straight or turn right — it made no difference — and the map would guide me straight to the hotel.

I got to the intersection and went straight.

Forty-five minutes later, I was heading back towards Oviedo.

I hadn't intended to; I just suddenly realized that I was on the road out of town. I'd wound up going in a complete circle, never having found a single one of the streets on my little map. It took me about 10 minutes to find somewhere to execute a U-turn, and eventually I found myself back at the intersection. This time I hung a right.

Thirty minutes later, I was Oviedo-bound again. I was still hopelessly lost, but at least I was doing it more efficiently.

I'd even stopped at one point to ask a couple of policemen, neither of whom (naturally) spoke English and consequently were of no help. I'd handed them my map. They looked at it and laughed. Never a good sign. I didn't bother with my Terminator 2 line for fear it'd be misinterpreted and I might wind up in jail. Then again, at least I'd have a room for the night.

By this time I was shouting profanities and reminding myself to thank Walt Simonson with a brick.

I pulled over and pondered the situation. When I'd been wandering through Gijon, I'd kept seeing signs for Oviedo, which I'd tried to avoid, and signs for sections of town I did want to go to, which I'd tried to follow. And I kept winding up heading towards Oviedo.

I had three choices: 1) Take another shot at finding my way; 2) find a cab and hire him to drive to the hotel, and then follow him; 3) drive to Oviedo and hope they moved the convention there. The first option seemed hopeless, the second embarrassing (not to mention tough to explain to a cabbie), and the third not terribly likely.

I was sitting there going, "Think think think," in a very Winnie-the-Pooh-like manner, and then I was reminded of the Milne story wherein Pooh, Piglet, and Rabbit are hopelessly lost in the Hundred Acre Wood. Every time they wander away from a particular clearing to try and find their way home, they wind up back at the clearing. And Pooh reasons that they should walk away from the clearing and then try to find — not their way home — but the clearing. In other words, they should try to stay lost and, in so doing, they will achieve their real destination. The idea works. They lose the clearing, but make it home.

Having nothing to lose, I entered Gijon, and followed the signs for Oviedo. Five minutes later, I was at the hotel.

Bear of Very Little Brain, indeed.

Wednesday, Oct. 9 — This convention was like none I've ever encountered. For starters, there was no dealer's room. Plus, there were no daytime activities at all. The activities didn't start until 7 p.m.

This was not a convention in the standard, commercial sense of the word. The money for the convention came from the government, with comic books being treated as a cultural phenomenon to be discussed by panelists and guests in a scholarly fashion.

The disparity between Spain and the United States is immediately apparent: In Spain, tax dollars go towards celebrating comics as an art form; in the United States, tax dollars go towards paying the salaries of DAs and cops so that they can shut down comic-book stores and prosecute creators.

By this point I had met the organizer of the convention: Faustino Rodgriguez Arbesu, a bearded, barrel-chested man who was also a teacher — outgoing, slightly bigger-than-life, and, so I was told, something of a local legend. There was also his eldest daughter, Sofia, who served as translator and guest organizer.

I had also met some of the other guests, such as Alan Grant and his wife, Sue, and Bryan Talbot and his wife, Mary, and Charles Dougherty.

I had attended the previous night's discussions. Unfortunately, the darkness of the auditorium and the two hours sleep I'd had in the previous 48 caught up with me. I sat there in the audience and kept dozing off during Bryan's speech. That, I figured, did not look good, so when Sofia suggested that perhaps I might just want to go back to the hotel and crash (perhaps my snoring was disturbing other attendees) I took her up on it. I slept 12 hours, then got up, did some writing, and now I was ready to go and explore the city.

It was closed.

Alan and Sue had told me that stores closed at noon and didn't open again until 5 p.m., but I hadn't quite believed that everything really did. But they knew whereof they spoke. The entire city was shut down. Nothing to see, nothing to do.

I went to the evening's speeches. Jose Ortiz did a one-hour Q&A — entirely in Spanish. It would have been an utterly boring endeavor for the English-speaking audience members (such as, for instance, me) but the way the speakers were set up, there was a huge movie screen to the right of the speaker. And all during the Q&A, slides of the participants' work appeared on the screen. Ortiz's artwork was quite splendid, particularly projected 45 feet tall.

Charles Dougherty had his Q&A next. I carefully watched Charles' interaction with the crowd. This was not going to be easy. When you were up on stage, it was impossible to make eye contact with the crowd because the lights were down. Plus the language barrier further distanced one from the fans; Charles had to wait until a question was translated, then make his response, and then the questioner had to wait until the answer was translated. On that basis, it was tough to connect with the fans on any sort of emotional level.

A late dinner was served, after which I was indoctrinated into the Spanish night life. We didn't get out of the restaurant until after midnight, at which point we went to a bar which also had dancing. At one point the DJ put on "The Macarena." No one is dancing to it. I'm astounded. In the United States, the entire Democratic National Convention was dancing to this Spanish tune, but in Spain, people didn't even seem to know it.

A fun fact that I learned, which went a long way toward explaining the previous day's blank stares: When Terminator 2 was released in Spain and dubbed into Spanish, it was decided that having Arnold say "Hasta la vista, baby," didn't work; the line didn't stand out. So Spanish audiences heard The Terminator rumble, "Sayonara, baby." Which actually isn't half bad. I wonder if, in Japan, he's back to Spanish or whether he speaks in Urdu or something.

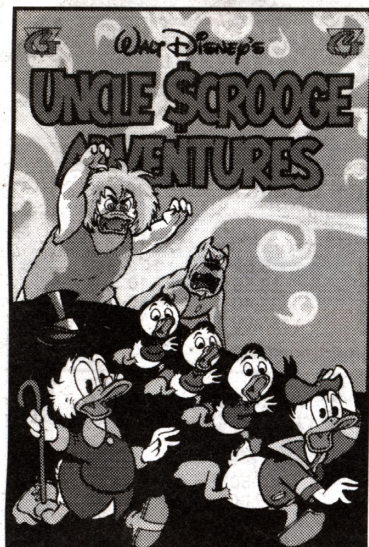

I asked what types of questions I could expect the next day, and was told that fans were really anxious to learn why I hate Image.

Oy.

Space Jammin'

Michael Jordan teams with Bugs Bunny and other Looney Tunes stars for new movie, trading cards

By Rocky Landsverk

Michael Jordan and Bugs Bunny. Two American icons. Two of the most recognizable figures of all time. Two of the top stars in the highly anticipated holiday blockbuster film, "Space Jam."

"Space Jam," scheduled to hit movie screens in mid-November, is the first motion picture for basketball superstar Michael Jordan and the Looney Tunes' first feature-length film. The first set of "Space Jam" cards by Upper Deck will be issued in early October in eight-card packs at a suggested retail price of $1.49 per pack.

Jordan will team up with Warner Bros.' Looney Tunes characters in what is sure to be one of the biggest movies of 1996.

"Because we have the exclusive rights to Michael Jordan as our trading cards spokesman, as well as the Looney Tunes characters, teaming them is an ideal situation for The Upper Deck Company," said Brian Burr, UD president. "Fans will get the best of both worlds in this film, and we are proud to be a part of its release."

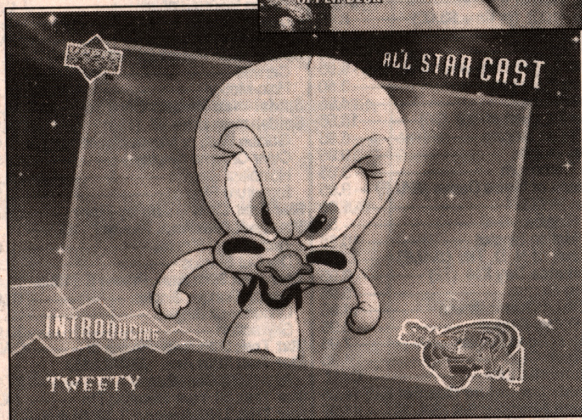

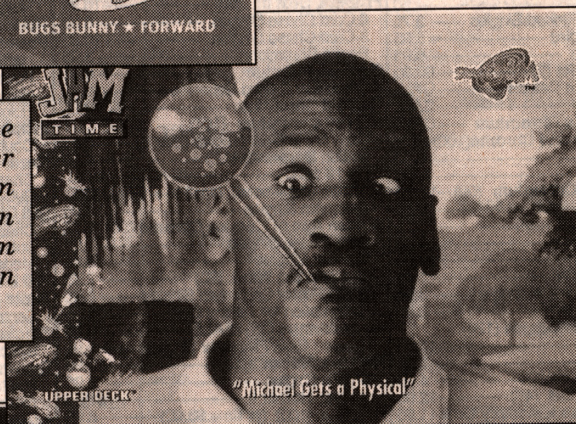

"Space Jam" is the first live action/animated feature starring the best of the best from the world of classic cartoon characters, namely Warner Bros. beloved Looney Tunes such as Bugs Bunny, Tasmanian Devil, Wile E. Coyote, Marvin the Martian, and the best of the best from the world of sports including Charles Barkley, Patrick Ewing, Larry Johnson and Larry Bird.

Upper Deck will benefit from the movie's immense publicity campaign, and took advantage with a higher-than-normal push into retail stores.

"Space Jam is a very commercial movie, so one of the real challenges we have been facing is the reality that entertainment trading cards should not necessarily be (sold) with sports cards," said Russell Kratzer, Upper Deck entertainment product manager. "Our whole strategy has been getting entertainment cards out of sports cards and into other entertainment products. We've come up with a lot of merchandising like clip strips, like what potato chips are sold on. A retailer can buy a clip strip and hang it wherever they want. That has made it a much more retail friendly product."

Shown are five cards from Upper Deck's Space Jam set, releasing in October. The film hits theaters in November.

Another retail success: Upper Deck is marketing premium collector sets, with a pack of cards, jumbo card and plastic figure, and they've been a huge hit, Kratzer said.

"We have quadrupled our early sales projections," she said. "Retailers are saying, 'We like entertainment cards.' There's been a lot of dissing of entertainment cards recently. What we've felt like is that we've stumbled onto something that retailers love. Its $4.99 price point is considered impulse, but it's a bigger item. It's been a fantastic success."

The 65-card regular set includes the all-star cast and many of the exciting moments that take place in "Space Jam," including the feverish excitement of Jordan leading the Looney Tunes on a basketball rampage against the threat of alien invaders. The set also combines the fun elements of the Looney Tunes characters with the collectibility of Michael Jordan cards.

Included among the 65-cards are 30 All-Star Cast cards, a special introduction to the stars of Space Jam, including new characters like Lola Bunny and the villainous Swackhammer. The Jam Time subset of 25 cards features memorable moments from the movie in the form of crossword puzzles and word finds on the card backs. Since each card back is not UV-coated, kids can write all over the backs of the cards.

Sneak Peeks (10 cards) is a subset featuring behind-the-scenes action and information. Monstars (five cards) is a fun look at the giant villains of "Space Jam."

Insert cards include Marvin's Flip Clips (30 cards, 1:pack). This insert is broken down into two sets of 15 cards each. When each set (#s 1-15 and 16-30) are placed in order and flipped, the animation comes to life. One scene is of the Monstars in a huddle yelling at each other; another scene is Yosemite Sam with guns drawn against one of the Nerd-lucks.

Jordan's Tune Squad (10 cards, 1:13) gives the scoop first-hand on the Looney Tunes gang's basketball moves learned from Jordan, who has assessed each of the players on his team and rated them by shooting, rebounding and even their gags. Some of Jordan's comments:

On Bugs Bunny, Jordan says: "Not only is Bugs Bunny quick and agile, but he thinks fast on his furry little feet. On the court, he's a hare in a hurry, which comes in handy when the dominating Monstars come thundering his way. Gifted with his incredible leaping ability, Bugs can slam it home from anywhere on the court."

On Daffy Duck, Jordan says: "Daffy Duck's best defense is a good gag.

What he lacks in size, he makes up for in sarcasm. Daffy dominates the defenders with his incessant chatter — he's unflappable. The resilient downy duck bounces back quickly from injury, so don't write him off too soon."

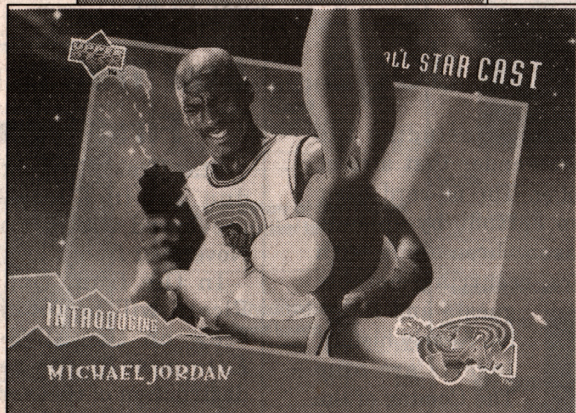

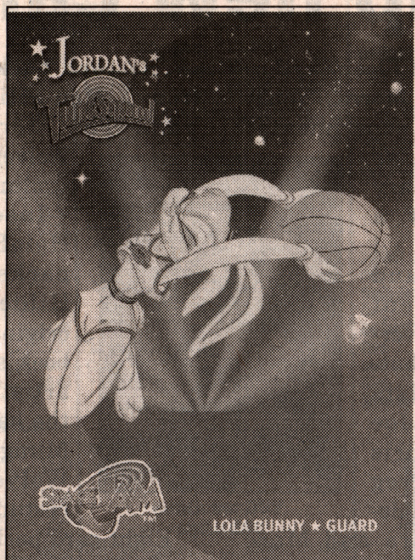

On Tweety, Jordan says: "He's so light on his feet, he literally flies around the court — giving new meaning to the word air!"

There are four lenticular Animation cards available, inserted at 1:35 packs. They show a sequence of the movie. While much of the rest of this set is aimed at cartoon fans (i.e. children), the Animation should bring in some serious Jordan collectors, Kratzer said.

"What it's challenged us to do is target the set to attract a dual consumer base," she said. "We shadow what the movie does with its marketing. We made a lot of the cards interactive and appropriate for kids. We wanted something collectible to be satisfying for Jordan fans, and that is the Animation card."

Upper Deck also took advantage of its spokesman relationship with

Sneak preview

Just to whet your appetite for "Space Jam," here's a few highlights from the movie's plot:

- The Nerd-lucks, our outer space aliens, attempt to kidnap the Looney Tunes and make them the main attraction at a failing intergalactic theme park, Moron Mountain.

- Bugs Bunny challenges the tiny Nerd-lucks to a basketball tournament: If the Looney Tunes win, they'll remain on earth. But if the aliens win, Bugs and Company become the property of Swackhammer, the evil boss of Moron Mountain.

- The Aliens take up Bugs' challenge before he realizes their hidden ability to absorb new skills — an ability that allows them to siphon the talent from professional basketball stars and turn from tiny aliens into enormous and powerful basketball-playing Monstars.

- Realizing he needs some serious help, Bugs turns to basketball's most spectacular player, Michael Jordan, who agrees to help the team.

- Subsequently, Michael and the Tune Squad attempt to fight off the Monstars on the court and ensure their future on earth.

Jordan. There is a sweepstakes in which collectors can win a trip to Hollywood via special game pieces. Second prizes include Jordan memorabilia. Those Space Jam Scratchers are inserted one in every three packs.

The sum total of the Space Jam program should mean a rarity in today's entertainment card world — a completely successful release.

"This has really been the license from heaven," Kratzer said. "We've had some critical success with the All-Time Toons product and we have a great marriage with Jordan. This is our all-time top entertainment release, without a doubt."

We be Jammin'

We're ready to dip into the seemingly bottomless Entertainment Cards gift barrel again. This time, we're offering boxes (yes, boxes) of Upper Deck's Space Jam. To enter, simply send us a letter or postcard with the answer to the following question: "If the game was on the line, and you had to pick a cartoon character to shoot the key free throws, who would it be, and why?"

Send your entries to: Tom Hultman, Space Jam Contest, 700 E. State St., Iola WI 54990. The entry deadline is Dec. 14. Winners' names will be pulled at random from the Entertainment Cards brown box.

Wolverine tears up new card set

Philosopher and fighter, savage and savior, exile and X-Man, the enigmatic hero known as Wolverine will be featured in the Fler Ultra X-Men: Wolverine trading card set, for release in October from Fler/SkyBox.

The Wolverine set will be comprised of 100 cards with an original comic story on the back. To illustrate his tumultuous career, the set is broken down into nine-block subsets.

"Wolverine has the richest, most detailed life of any character in the

Marvel Universe," said Fler/SkyBox editorial director Matt Morra. "You'll see Wolverine as the experimental Weapon X, as the mercenary Patch, as a Samurai warrior, and the current savage Wolverine. Contributing artists include Joe Jusko, Boris Vallejo, Greg and Tim Hildebrandt, Mark Texeira and Marc Sasso.

The card backs feature line art from X-Men artists Mark Buckingham. The story picks up from Wolverine #100, a first for trading cards.

Inserts include nine HoloFlash cards (1:4 packs) painted by the Hildebrandts with an original nine-panel comic book story by Spider-Man artist Mike Weirigo on the back. Three lenticular Mirage cards (1:24) depict Wolverine's different costumes.

Eight-card packs carry a suggested retail $2.49.

Fler/SkyBox goes to the dogs

The soon-to-be live action "101 Dalmations" that hits theaters near Thanksgiving will be featured on a card series by Fler/SkyBox earlier in November.

The 101-card set features 27 story cards that tell the story of the film. There are 12 character cards to introduce the major players. Twenty-one subset cards detail the major subplots of the film - five Animal Pranks, five The Great Escape, five Villains, four Puppy Love and two checklists.

Interactive cards include six Build-a-dog house, six Stick-um, 14 Pop-Outs, 10 Color-in and five Puppy Pin-ons. Inserts are four magnetic frames (1:9 packs) and two fuzzy foil cards (1:24).

Every pack includes one of four mini-magazines featuring fun-filled activities for youngsters.

Glenn Close (Cruella De Vil) and Jeff Daniels (Roger) are two major stars. John Hughes is director.

●SkyBox Babylon 5 released in October and highlights the third season of the television show, including the season two season-ender that airs at the end of October. The 60-card basic set includes an episode-by-episode synopsis of season three along with main characters, recurring/ notable guests and Babylon 5 early history. Inserts are nine The Coming of the Shadows (1:4 packs), 10 Creator's Collection (1:10) with behind-the-scenes reflections by J. Michael Straczynski, 50 B5 Trivia cards (1:2), 12

101 Dalmations

Babylon 5

Nightwatch Posters (1:5) that expand to nine times the normal size of a card and 1,000 signed cards from Straczynski, inserted at one per case. Eight-card packs carry an SRP of $1.49.

●The 3-D modeled hologram series continues with Batman Holo Series in October. Six exclusive DC OverPower hologram game cards (1:72) are included in the set, which has an SRP of $1.99 for a four-card pack. HoloAction (1:4) and HoloCel (1:72) are inserts. The 50-card regular set is augmented by a parallel set that has a bat emblem stamped in blue foil.

Star Trek is making First Contact

Star Trek: First Contact, a film due out in December, will be previewed with a card set in late November from Fler/SkyBox.

In the film, Capt. Jean-Luc Picard will be reunited with his crew on the all-new starship Enterprise-E, two years after the destruction of their ship.

The 60-card Star Trek: First Contact Cinema Collection basic set includes 58 storyline cards, a checklist and a title card. Bonus cards include 12 Techno-Cel Borg cards, six new Enterprise-E cards, six Ships' Blueprint Posters, 10 Character cards, 10 Behind-the-Scenes cards and an autographed card from Brent Spiner ("Data").

Hammer Horror II

Cornerstone is releasing Hammer Horror Series II in November. The 81-card set includes Hammer films like "One Million Years B.C.," "Satanic Rites of Dracula," "The Mummy" and "The Hound of the Baskervilles."

Randomly inserted into packs are autographed cards of various Hammer luminaries. Scheduled to sign are Jimmy Sangster, Ian Scoons, Dave Prowse, David Warbeck and Ingrid Pitt. A mail-in redemption card will offer a special Monstermotion card. Cornerstone's phone number is 520-722-1304.

The state of the non-sports card industry

The Future in the cards

by Alex Amado

"It's been a very difficult year," said Allan Gordon, president of art-card manufacturer Comic Images, "and I think anybody who says otherwise has not really been in this market."

His sentiments reflect those of many producers and retailers: The last 12 months have been tough. There was an almost across-the-board consensus among manufacturers and retailers interviewed for this feature that the non-sports card market was down from last year and that it's nowhere close to what it was like in the boom of 1992 and 1993.

However, sales are stabilizing for some manufacturers. Ted Adams, director of trading cards for Wildstorm Productions, said, "We pretty much know what we can expect from our card sets these days. In fact, our last couple of sets have actually gone up in sales, so I think we've reached the bottom of the slump."

Ira Friedman, vice president of publishing and new product development for Topps, agreed. "While I don't think the industry hasn't shown any growth within the last 12 months, the market has been pretty stable for us." Friedman attributed Topps' stability to the strong licenses it is putting out cards for, including the Star Wars, X-Files and Independence Day licensed cards.

Another positive voice in the group was Allan Caplan, president and CEO of Inkworks, producers of the recent James Bond Connoisseur's Collection cards, among others. "It's going well for us," Caplan said, "primarily because we have respect for the retailer, and most important, we have respect for the fan base." Caplan said he believes that a lot of the problems in the industry stem from bad decisions made by some of the large companies. "We've had a couple of large companies that have just about ruined the industry because of their lack of understanding that their short-term decisions have long-lasting effects on consumers. You cannot chase consumers away at the rate they've been doing and expect to have any kind of market left."

Retailers echoed manufacturers' concerns about the lack of growth in the non-sports card market. According to Brian Schur, owner of the Cosmic Comics chain of stores in Nebraska, "Sales are nowhere near what they were two or three years ago, when we'd sell a case or two of whatever was hot. Now we treat non-sports cards like periodicals: We get a few boxes in, sell a few boxes, and then we order the next thing."

He also noted a decline in consumer interest. "People just aren't that interested anymore. So many cards came out that people felt like they'd seen it all," Schur added. "And my new comics sales are up this year, so it's not like we don't have customers in our stores."

Bob Borden, owner of the Fantasy Books & Games chain of stores in California, said "The market is definitely worse than it was a year ago. We're probably down by 25%. I think it's partially because customer counts are down, but it's also price-related. Cards, even more than comics, have undergone a significant price increase."

Pricing

Appropriate pricing for cards was something that most manufacturers admitted is a problem in the industry — but they each said their company is pricing their packs as fairly as possible. This issue is fueled by the lack of standardized, on-pack manufacturer suggested retail prices, which allows for wide variations in the sales price of a given pack at the retail level. Prices seem to run the gamut from 99 cents (which is a rarity) to the more common $3 or more.

Obviously, the price point has to reflect the type of card set it is. "We start our packs at 99¢," said Friedman of Topps, "and they go up to $3 for our all-chromium sets." And according to Jerry Bennington of Krome Productions, which mostly produces high-end cards, "The challenge is trying to maintain a certain price level without hurting the consumer by lowering the quality. We try to maintain a $2.50 or $2.75 price point for our packs, and it's not always easy, but that's what we need to do to ensure our sell-through — to make sure our packs move off the shelves and into the hands of the consumers. We've discovered that even though customers say they don't want to pay for a premium product, they are still demanding quality."

Gordon of Comic Images said that the company has lowered its average price point by using a thinner but still high-quality stock, producing fewer chromium sets, and by being more discerning in the licenses they purchase. "We ask a lot of questions before we buy a license. Does this make sense today? Will this make sense six months from now? Who will this sell to? We're starting with the customer," he explained.

Collation

A perennial issue in the card industry revolves around collation, or the ability of the card manufacturer to ensure that every box will contain at least one set of the basic cards. According to Bob Borden of Fantasy Books & Games, "Manufacturers should work hard to have extremely good collation in their boxes. Customers get frustrated when they can't get a set out of just one box, instead of two or three or four. They end up spending $100 to get a set that retails for $25 or $30. That's a sure way to drive customers away."

On this issue, Caplan of Inkworks agreed strongly. "We were the first company to put a guarantee — we call it the Inkworks Guarantee — on our boxes, which says that if you don't get an entire set of the basic cards in a box, drop us a note and we'll complete your set."

While most card manufacturers haven't gone so far as to print the promise on their box, many of them do have customer service departments that will help fans round out their collections when collation was poor on a particular project. Bennington of Krome Productions said that "because a machine packs the product, there is no 100% guarantee. On occasion, there are going to be errors. We like to get as close as possible to having from one to two complete sets in each box."

That was echoed by Adams of Wildstorm, who said, "We certainly try, and we succeed most of the time, but there are always going to be a few boxes that are short, and we have a customer service department that handles that, so if someone doesn't get a complete set, we're more than happy to give them what they need."

Topps recently had some collation problems that were discovered only after the product was manufactured. According to Friedman, "At Topps, we take the issue of collation very seriously. When we ran into problems, we took immediate steps to rectify the problems with retailers and customers, who were all made aware of the redemption program we put into effect." The program allowed people to send in duplicate cards, and exchange them for needed cards on a one-for-one basis. "Obviously," said Friedman, "This isn't the way we would have preferred to do it, but we did try to satisfy every customer out there. You can point to many of the sets we've done over the years that were virtually flawless in terms of collation, and we are moving forward to earn our wings back in that category. You will see with products that are about to ship like X-Files Season 3 and Star Wars: Shadows of the Empire that the collation will be excellent."

Quantity of product

Over the last 12 months, the non-sports card industry has seen a slight abatement of the product glut it had been experiencing. Most manufacturers interviewed were producing fewer sets this year than last. Borden of Fantasy Books & Games observed, "There's probably less out there than there was a year ago, and it's still a little too much. In terms of dollars, there's definitely more dollars worth of product on the shelves."

The cost savings from reducing the quantity of output has helped many manufacturers stay in business. Other factors also came into the decisions to reduce the size of company lines. "I think companies are coming to their senses about paying huge money for movie licensing and licensing every movie that comes along," said Ted Adams of Wildstorm. "It makes sense to have cards for "Independence Day" or "Star Wars," but I don't think it's really necessary to have a card set [for every movie]."

Gordon of Comic Images said, "We don't get a lot of feedback from retailers, but what we do get at trade shows and from local stores indicates that those retailers that are still in are good businesspeople. They have to be picky about what they buy, and they'll be the first ones to let you know if you put out a bad series." Both Gordon and Adams seemed to indicate that the reduction of the volume of product on the market was one of the keys to improving sales across the board.

There is clearly such a thing as too much. "We put out a James Bond: Goldeneye set," said Caplan of Inkworks, "but we didn't come out with a series two and series three of Goldeneye. That's overkill."

Friedman of Topps observed, "There are an overwhelming amount of choices out there and it's hard for retailers to get behind every offer that comes along, and it's confusing to consumers who don't know where to plop down their dollars."

Retail views

There are a lot of other causes for the sluggish market conditions, and while much of it rests on the shoulders of the manufacturers, there is plenty to spread around. "For one thing," said Ted Adams of Wildstorm, "I think that a lot of retailers overreacted to the state of the market. They drastically cut back on what they were ordering, and now I think that's finally turning around a little bit."

Keith Cunningham, president of 21st Century Archives, which produces the Vargas trading cards, among others, pegs that sort of conservative ordering as one of their main obstacles. "Conservative ordering and sell-to do well with non-sports cards, they have to carry more than one box. Because consumers — real collectors — buy a box at a time, but you also want them available for pack sales. Comics-store owners get spoiled because of the high turnover their product has. Kmart only looks to turn its product four times a year. For a young kid who buys non-sports cards, he'll come in and buy one pack every week for 12 weeks in a row. And if you run out on the second week, what's he going to buy? And how many times is going to be disappointed before he stops coming back?"

The future

With regard to the future of the non-sports trading-card industry, it was clear that all of these manufacturers had set goals for themselves and for the business as a whole. According to Gordon of Comic Images, "We as an industry need to become a little more responsive to the customers in terms of collation, putting out quality product, and pricing it fairly. When you put out good product, the fans flock to it. They're smart, and they're still supportive of good product, they're just not buying everything anymore."

"Right now," said Cunningham of 21st Century Archives, "I think we're going to be stuck in a holding pattern for some time. I don't see a lot of aggressive movement being taken by anyone. Everyone's being cautious."

Sounding a positive retail note, Borden of Fantasy Books & Games said, "I think there's a tremendous amount of good stuff out there. It's kind of like comics in that respect—there's probably never been more good stuff, it's just very high-priced and the collector base has been dwindling away as a result of the price."

Topps' Friedman summed up the situation: "The challenge is clearly on us collectively as an industry to continue to excite the consumer and keep them coming back for more."

through isn't bad," he explained, "but this has a really negative effect on us, because our stuff is really an ever-green product. It's not like sports cards, where if you tried to sell 1993 baseball cards right now it would just be silly. But I look at the first Vargas set, and we've still got cases left. It's the kind of product where if someone were to go into a store and buy the third set, why wouldn't they also buy the first and second sets? Unfortunately, I haven't been able to make the retail community aware of that."

However, Schur of Cosmic Comics said, "The rules have changed. Gone are the days when I can sell cases and cases of cards. I buy what I can sell, and that's what a smart retailer has to do now."

Caplan of Inkworks said, "I come out of a retail background, so I'm a little more in tune to the retail industry than most. For retailers who want

MARKET REPORT

By Kurt Samuels

Fleer reduces 1997 entertainment sets to 17, down from 29 in 1996

The entertainment card great depression has affected every level of the market, from collectors and dealers to card companies, distributors and other card-related companies.

Companies that have gone out of business during this time, or just seemed to have disappeared, include Donruss, Authentix, Lime Rock, Cards Illustrated and Witcraft (dealer Ron Wilson). Others, though still functioning, are downsized from previous times.

No company has been immune to these business changes; not even the hobby's big boys. Topps has reduced its production runs and lowered its average price points to attract buyers. Now news from Fleer/SkyBox has the company dramatically reducing its number of titles for 1997.

Since coming back to the entertainment card market in 1994, Fleer has made great leaps in how many products it releases, going from seven releases in 1994 to 18 in 1995 (not including Master Prints).

After buying SkyBox in 1995 and merging its product line into the lineup this year, the company is scheduled to release 29 different titles before year's end, easily the most by one single company in 1996.

But in 1997, Fleer has 17 entertainment card sets tentatively planned for the year, a more than 40 percent reduction. While more licenses may be added (and some removed), this is a big slice in production.

Is this a bad sign for Fleer and/or the entertainment market? No.

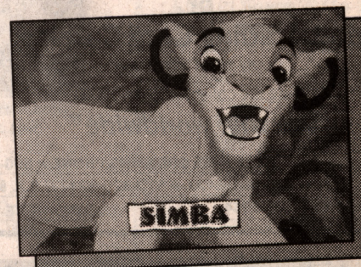

In fact, this may be some of the better news the market has received in the past year. It's been widely written in hobby publications and stated by dealers, collectors and other hobby followers there is too much product being released to too small of a collecting base.

Secondly, most of these same people agree that Fleer has produced too much product – too many Marvel cards, Star Trek series and DC products – and has watered down what is currently out on dealers' shelves.

Many dealers, let alone collectors, can't distinguish one set from the next. As one dealer, who wished his name not be printed, said, "I never thought I'd see the day when a card of Wolverine would not sell."

Thus, the news of less sets should be good – at least that is what Fleer/SkyBox believes. The company is banking it's not the number of products it produces that will catch the collector's eye, but it's the quality of the product it releases that collectors care about.

"The fact is [we are going to] produce less in 1997 from 1996," said Fleer/SkyBox Executive Vice President of Marketing Steve Bobowski. "That gives us an opportunity to put more effort, energy and resources behind the releases we do have."

"We will probably end up with fewer releases, but the ones we do have will hopefully have greater velocity for the retailer."

For the past year, Fleer/SkyBox has been breaking its product line into three distinct consumer bases: an introductory pack, such as the Marvel Vision and the Batman and Robin Action Packs, priced at 99 cents or less; a medium-priced pack; and a high-end collectible for the more serious collector.

The goal of this plan is to bring people into the collecting fold and move them from being a new buyer to a casual collector to finally a steady others, no entertainment card set was able to surpass 10,000 cases in sales since 1995. In fact, 1,500 cases sold is considered good in the current market.

Fleer/SkyBox have combined to produce 15 Star Trek sets since 1994. The company has scheduled four card sets for 1997.

card company which planned to release three entertainment card series this year, has filed for bankruptcy.

The three-year-old company had planned to release The Mask Animated Series, one of the more hotly contested licenses on the block, in addition to racing/entertainment crossovers: Wacky Racing, which would have included Hanna-Barbera characters and racer Steve Grissom, and Racing to Save Endangered Species, which would feature endangered animals and the racers who loved them.

As for cancelled sets, Fleer pulled the plug on Marvel Vision II and Aladdin, while FPG cancelled the Kelley Freas fantasy art set.

card-buying fan.

"In 1997, we will know more about the consumer — who's buying, why they're buying, where they're buying, what they're looking for by a product standpoint — than we did in 1996," said Bobowski. "We are really designing products to fit what consumers are looking for, while at the same time, staying very true to the characters and the properties."

But as people move in and through the system, there is the concern that collectors aren't buying in the same amounts as years earlier. In the now fabled year of 1994, SkyBox and Fleer produced the two hottest licenses: Lion King (Series I and II) and Ultra X-Men.

Those three titles generated more than 110,000 cases sold (79,000 Lion King and 35,000 X-Men, according to reports). Since then, no title by any card company has been able to reach those figures.

And, except for Pocahontas, The Hunchback of Notre Dame and a few interest. And once we do that, we have to make the product fun," Bobowski said.

Though it may be a while before Fleer or any other card company produces 30,000 cases of any entertainment card product, Bobowski does see opportunities for the company to have a chance to capitalize in the hobby, pointing directly at the new "Batman and Robin" movie set which will be released May 1 and the new Disney animation film "Hercules" scheduled for May 28. Both sets are expected to sell well.

"We want [the cards] to be part of the [movie goers'] total entertainment package," he said. "Not only do they see the movie, they get the cards."

As for the future, Bobowski said it is bright, not just for Fleer/SkyBox, but for the entire entertainment card market.

Let's hope he's correct.

Maxxed Out: Maxx, the racing

Boo! Looking for something to hand out to the kiddies this Halloween? How about packs of entertainment cards.

Entertainment cards are the perfect treat. The reasons:

1. They come in easy to dispense single packages.

2. Sleek pack design invites children to open.

3. Other than Fleer's Action packs, there's none of that sugary goop to rot children's teeth.

4. Cards make excellent weapons in fending off goblins, ghosts and other creatures that go bump in the night.

5. If just one kid can find joy in collecting, it makes this hobby grow that much faster.

Here today, gone tomorrow:

Ken Smith who was hired as the director of hobby and international sales for Inkworks earlier this year after being let go by Fleer/SkyBox (where he served as director of hobby sales), has left Inkworks and took a position with Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., based Coin Builders, one of the nation's larger trading card distributors.

According to an Inkworks spokesperson, while the company deeply regrets losing Smith, the offer he received from Coin Builders was "too good to pass up."

(Next month: More on Inkworks and its plan for 1997.)

University produces cards to introduce freshmen to campus

It looks as if everyone is getting into card making business. The latest is the University at Buffalo, which produced a 50-card set to introduce more than 2,000 incoming freshmen to the 1,200-acre campus.

"The cards have been a big hit," UB director of student life Barbara J. Ricotta told the Buffalo News recently.

Freshmen had to trade with others to complete the set.

MCI Launches 1996 Holiday Card Series

Set Features Unique Security Feature Designed To Help Retailers

New Releases

- MCI will produce a series of holiday-themed phone cards for retail stores nationwide.

The 1996 Holiday Ornament series features three images designed to appeal to holiday shoppers – a stocking with candy and treats, a snowflake, and an ornament with toys and gifts.

To combat the threat of theft, this new series of cards will feature POSA (point-of-sale-swipe activation). Cards that are displayed on the sales floor remain inactive until check-out, at which point they are run through a swiping device that activates the card. This added security allows customers the opportunity to pick up and inspect the product, while eliminating the merchants' concern of losing a product with stored value.

- Brill Productions and Finish Line Racing Collectibles have kicked off Phone Home-2000. The goal of the project is to place an emergency prepaid phone card into the hands of every child in America.

"We understand that if you give a child $2 in cash, chances are they will spend it on candy or video games," said Bob Brill, president of Brill Productions. "However, if they have a plastic phone card in their wallet or purse, parents can be sure their children will have the means to phone home in an emergency."

To kick off the program, Finish Line Collectibles donated nearly $1,000 in phone card time to the Reseda (Calif.) Youth Center. Each child was given a $2 phone card and instructed on how to use the card.

"This kind of grass roots effort is what we need to teach Americans the benefits of using phone cards and how they can feel more secure concerning their children," said Finish Line Art West.

The phone cards donated by Finish Line are from its PhonePaks product which features NASCAR drivers and cars.

Organizations wishing to start their own distribution of telephone debit cards may purchase these by the box or by the case directly from Finish Line (904-285-6227) or from Brill Productions (805-658-1076).

- Fans of the Carolina Panthers who attend games at Ericsson Stadium in Charlotte can purchase food, beverages and souvenirs with a new series of stored value cards.

The inaugural "Stadium Series" features four different cards. There are two $50 cards (one picturing Lamar Lathon, the other Greg Kragen), a $100 card (Kerry Collins) and a $20 card (team mascot). The backs of the cards, when placed together, form an aerial photo of the team's new stadium in Charlotte.

For information on how to obtain the cards, call (800) 689-02290.

Market Report

- The sports card hobby has been plagued by new product "dumping" in recent years – dealers selling new products at a loss in order to avoid having excess inventory.

Because of the inherent value of phone time associated with phone cards, it was believed that the phone card hobby might be immune from dumping. But that may not be the case.

In the October issue of PCM Report, Sandy Bashover writes that some issuers have been dumping expired cards on the marketplace at prices well below their initial retail values. He cites an example of Upper Deck selling expired five-card Rusty Wallace phone card sets for $1-$2 per card. Originally, each card sold for $6-$10 each.

But was Upper Deck truly dumping the cards? After all, shouldn't an expired card be worth less if it can never be used to make a phone call?

The issue of expired cards and their values is one that will surely need to be better defined if the phone card hobby is to attract new collectors. If a card's selling price is based on the value of its phone time, and that time disappears, the secondary market value of the card has to be affected in some way. If used cards are worth less than unused cards, shouldn't expired cards be treated along the same lines?

Send us your thoughts on this subject and we'll print some of your responses in future issues.
